I undertake to say from my own knowledge that not only you can, but that nine-tenths of the business public do, purchase envelopes in the market and have their return card printed upon them with their advertisements for less money than they can buy the stamped envelopes of the Government. Why? Because the Government, in its specification, requires the highest grade of envelope that is known in the business market——

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In a minute, when I am through with this—and those envelopes made under the Government's specifications cost more than the envelope that is usually used by the business world, and they can take the ordinary envelope and print upon it for less money than it costs to get the government envelopes. I do not believe that this House ought to be prostituted to the purpose of one contractor because in the course of time he has lost its contract and another contractor has obtained the contract.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am proud to yield to my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], who has a personal interest in this matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. First of all, I want to dispute the proposition of the gentleman that the government printers use the highest class envelopes in the world.

Mr. MANN. I did not say that.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Illinois seems to pose as an expert. The cost of the envelopes to the Government which they send out is 79 cents a thousand, and it sells them at $1.24——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not an expert; I am not even, like the gentleman, interested personally in the——

Mr. BARNHART. I am interested to this extent, that it costs the Government 79 cents, so the Postmaster-General says, to purchase these envelopes. They sell them at $1.24. They frank them out to the man who buys them. A thousand envelopes weighs 7½ pounds. At 9 cents a pound, the reported price of transportation of second-class mail matter, that would be 67½ cents.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time may be extended so that the gentleman many finish his question. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARNHART. The envelopes cost the Government 79 cents, according to its own report. It pays 67½ cents (at 9 cents per pound) postage per thousand to send them to the consumer, to the purchaser, and sells them to him at $1.24. So at 79 cents first cost and 67 cents postage, it is a loss of 23 cents on every package of envelopes of 1,000 which the Government sends out, and you can not figure it any other way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am quite confident there is no loss to the Government in the printing of these envelopes, and I can assure the gentleman that when the Government transports his newspapers through the mail for nothing there is loss to the Government, and the gentleman——

Mr. BARNHART. I submit that the gentleman misrepresents the facts. Publishers pay 1 cent per pound postage on papers circulated through free-delivery offices.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman——

Mr. BARNHART. Publishers do pay postage, and I want to submit further, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. MANN. Always with pleasure.

Mr. BARNHART. There is a loss in every package of envelopes that is sent out in 1,000 quantities, and it is the small quantities on which the consumer pays as much as a thousand per cent profit.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, during the debate a firm has been quoted of Hartford, Conn. I do not know the facts in relation to this matter, but I do know that they are among the best and most honest people that we have in our State.

Mr. MANN. I have not attacked their honesty. I think they are exceeding bright when they can work up the House of Representatives to a fury.

Mr. SPERRY. If the gentleman has said anything to mislead the people of the country, I am very sorry indeed, and the gentleman would be if he knew the men as I know them. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is all very well to say these are good men. I only repeat that I know nothing in regard to the facts in the case, but that this is a very peculiar circumstance, which I think is easily explained, that when this Hartford envelope company, having had this contract for many years, lost it, somebody was enabled to get the public, the printers throughout the country, the newspapers now enjoying a subsidy from the Government, the job printers agitated so that they have written to every Member of Congress, writing and telegraphing, too, and no one can make me believe that this has occurred by accident.

Mr. SPERRY. It came by bidding.

Mr. FASSETT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FASSETT. Does this new firm which has the contract do anything different from that done by the old firm?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the firm does. The law is just the law now as it was when the old firm had the contract, and the practice is the same now as it was then so far as getting the envelopes is concerned, but no one ever thought of it while the old company had the contract, and they would not now if this contract had not been moved west of the Allegheny Mountains.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, in order to save the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I will state in the beginning that I have been engaged in the newspaper business most of my business life; that I have an interest in a newspaper now; and that this newspaper circulates its county subscription without charge for postage, and in that sense receives a subsidy from the Government. Having thus cleared away the underbrush I would like to observe that the gentleman from Illinois is wholly mistaken in saying that no protest was ever made against the system now under discussion until the contract was taken away from the Hartford, Conn., firm and given to some other. I confess I never heard until to-day that a Hartford, Conn., firm ever did have the contract, and I do not know what firm has it now, while I did take occasion as long ago as the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress to offer an amendment to the post-office appropriation bill, substantially the same as that now under discussion. I did that in response to the unanimous demand of the newspaper fraternity of my district, and that demand is just as unanimous now as it was then. And I believe it is as unanimous over the country generally as it is in my district.

The gentleman says this protest was never heard until recently. In addition to what I have already said I wish to say in reply that again and again, year after year, the newspaper organizations, publishers' associations, printers' societies of all kinds all over the United States have been passing resolutions denouncing the practice, and pleading with Congress to change it. I hold in my hand a letter written by the chairman of "the National Joint Committee," by the letter-head of which I see there is represented the American Envelope Manufacturers' Association, the International Association of Photo-Engravers, the National Association of Stationers and Manufacturers, the National Editorial Association, the National Paper Trade Association, the Printers' League of America, and the United Typothetæ of America.

These organizations, Mr. Chairman, consider this matter of enough importance to warrant them in retaining a committee here at the capital during the entire winter for the sole and only purpose of protesting against the printing of individual return-card stamped envelopes by the United States Government.

Now, what is the reason this protest has become so strong right now? I think, perhaps, I can explain it by directing the attention of the Members of the House to a circular which I hold in my hand and which was issued during the administration of Mr. Lawshe as Third Assistant Postmaster-General. I am not criticising Mr. Lawshe. He took his official position seriously, and considered it to be a part of his duty to push the government business in every way he could. And one of the ways taken advantage of to push that business was to issue a circular, one of which I hold in my hand—an attractive colored poster—calling the attention of the business public to the fact that the Government could furnish stamped envelopes at a very much cheaper rate than they could be obtained in any other way, printed with the return card of the firm. And upon the title-page of this circular there appears this inscription:

Everyone who uses government stamped envelopes is aiding the Post-Office Department in improving the service.

A. L. LAWSHE,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

If government stamped envelopes be used, there are no stamps to fall off in the mail. If your return card be printed on the envelope, there are no lost letters. Read information within.

The chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, in response to a suggestion which I made the other day, expressed the opinion that if such a circular as I referred to—and I had this circular in my mind—had been issued, it had not been done by the Post-Office Department, but by the firm which had the contract for printing the envelopes. I think he must have been mistaken in that suggestion, because there appears on the same title-page this inscription:

Post-Office Department, Third Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

There was certainly every reason to believe that if the circular was not issued by the department it did have official approval, and I am able to testify from personal conference with Mr. Lawshe that it did have his approval.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto terminate in twenty-five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will not object if I can have five minutes' time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in twenty-five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. I object.

Mr. SCOTT. I was proceeding to say that I have every reason to believe that the circular, to which I have called attention, was issued by the department, because Mr. Lawshe said to me personally that he considered it part of his duty, touching the government business, to effect the sale of as many of these envelopes as possible. Not only was this circular issued in large numbers and sent over the country broadcast, but it was sent at the expense of all of the people. It was sent through the mails under the department frank, and the postmasters all over the country were asked to circulate it. In support of this, I read an extract from a letter, which I hold in my hand, from the chairman of the committee to which I have referred. It says, in speaking of this circular:

It was posted in almost every post-office in the United States; it was circulated by city letter carriers in the counting rooms of large business houses, and posted there as an attractive placard; it is said to have been circulated by rural free-delivery carriers, but of that we have no evidence. As to the other points, we have the evidence of our own eyes, having seen them posted in many places as stated.

We are informed, and we believe, and it stands to reason that these placards were sent out free of postage through the department or under its auspices.

I have a letter here from Nazareth, Pa., signed by Albert O. Sturgis, in which he says:

We might mention, besides sending out circulars, our local postmaster goes from business house to business house, canvassing, making personal solicitation for envelope orders.

It is work of that character—the sending out of circulars like this, the personal solicitation of postmasters throughout the country—that has aroused the sentiment which has been expressed here to-day. I venture to say that if the Government of the United States were to take up any other business of the country as it is taking up the publishers' business, if it were to sell shoe strings or needles or pins or pocketknives at a price far below that which any commercial concern could furnish any of those articles and should send out thousands of men drumming up the trade, you would have protests here from the men engaged in those lines of business, just as you now have the publishers protesting against government competition in their business.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is there any more reason why the Government should sell these printed envelopes than they should sell the ink or pens to write with?

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman's question answers itself. Of course there is no reason why the Government should furnish these envelopes, with the individual name or the name of the firm printed upon them, any more than there is why it should furnish them the ink with which to write or the pen used in writing.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I want first to disabuse the mind of the House of the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois that newspapers are circulated free in the country districts. The statement is really without warrant, because every newspaper that circulates through the free-delivery offices must pay 1 cent a pound on all newspapers sent from that post-office.

Mr. STAFFORD. I take exception to that statement, because it is not so.

Mr. BARNHART. Not those of free city delivery?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not those of free city delivery. A country newspaper, in the county in which it is published, may be deposited in the post-office of publication and distributed free on rural routes in the county of publication.

Mr. MANN. It is not worth the gentleman's while to contradict me, because I was right.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit that the printers of the country are not alone opposed to this government contract of printing envelopes. I submit that the printers of the country are not alone in protesting that the Government is interfering with their business. On the other hand, they are able to show, and I am able to show, that in this envelope business this Government is doing business at a loss with the men who buy large quantities, but where it sells in smaller than 500 quantities its profit is as much as 1,000 per cent. I want you to hear this list of the prices:

One stamped envelope at 3 cents, or $10 per thousand for the envelopes.

Two stamped envelopes at 5 cents, or $5 per thousand for the envelopes.

Three stamped envelopes for 7 cents, or $3.33 per thousand for the envelopes.

Five stamped envelopes, 11 cents, or $2 per thousand for the envelopes.

Eight stamped envelopes, 17 cents, or $1.25 per thousand for the envelopes.

Twenty-five stamped envelopes, 54 cents, or $1.50 per thousand for the envelopes.

You will notice that they charge $1.50 a thousand for 25 stamped envelopes and $1.25 a thousand for 8 stamped envelopes.

Fifty stamped envelopes, $1.07, or $1.40 per thousand for the envelopes.

Five hundred stamped envelopes, $10.56, or $1.12 per thousand for the envelopes.

Now, this refers to the popular business-size envelope, six and three-quarters. I am not going to attempt to explain why under the business methods of the Post-Office Department a very much lower rate is charged for 8 stamped envelopes than for 25 stamped envelopes, but I am prepared to show you, by the representation of the Post-Office Department itself, that these envelopes cost the Government 79 cents a thousand. When they sell them at $1.24 a thousand they must pay 67½ cents per thousand for transporting them at second-class rates, and the result is that on every 500 or more envelopes sent out the Government loses 22 cents per thousand.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments close in twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in twenty minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite evident that the House is in a mood to put a stop to this printing of envelopes by the Government. It is only a question whether we shall do it on the 1st of July of this year, and in a manner violate the contract that we have with the manufacturers of the envelopes, or whether we shall do it a year later and keep faith with the company. The responsibility of breaking the contract the 1st of July this year rests with one or two gentlemen in the Ohio delegation, and I want them to understand that. If they will assure the House that they will not make a point of order against the paragraph in the bill, I think the House will be quite willing to take up that paragraph and act upon it first under unanimous consent, and thereby they might save their concern at Dayton in the completion of the contract.

Mr. MANN. In order to absolve any Members from Ohio of the responsibility of this, and having no connection, remote, indirect, or otherwise, with any concern in Ohio, I may say to the gentleman that I shall raise the point of order, no matter what any gentlemen from Ohio may agree to.

Mr. SMITH of California. The gentleman from Illinois has shown himself to be in an unusually ugly mood to-day. He has been impugning the motives of everybody engaged in this discussion, although he ought to know, and I will not proceed to instruct him——

Mr. MANN. I shall be glad to go to school to the gentleman, because perhaps he would make a better schoolmaster than Member of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of California. Well, if the gentleman is to be my pupil, he must not talk when the teacher has the floor. This agitation for the suppression of envelope printing is much older than the gentleman's service in Congress. I can not remember the time when the printers have not agitated the matter more or less. It was brought forward this year largely through the magazines, because they wanted to raise some counter feeling in the country to divert attention from the proposition to increase magazine postage. There is where the agitation began this year, just the same as the magazines raised the hue and cry about railway mail pay and things of that kind, in order to divert attention from the increase in their postage. But, of course, if objection is going to be raised against the paragraph in the bill, which everyone admits is subject to the point of order, why, then, we will have to take what is not subject to a point of order and let the Dayton concern take its medicine; because in very large measure it has brought on this present condition of things by the feeling that prevails on this floor that Representatives from that part of the country were going to raise a point of order against an amendment which would save that contract.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, to me it is not a question whether or not the Government makes a profit out of the printing of these envelopes, nor am I so much concerned about the contracts of the Government with the Dayton concern, but I am especially concerned in the fact that the Government should get from under what is regarded as a monopoly along this line. Instead of being one of the functions of the Government to uphold a monopoly, I have always believed it to be one of the functions of the Government to destroy monopolies. I recollect that the Sixtieth Congress appropriated money for the purpose of enabling the Government to go into the business, to the end that it might be able to destroy a monopoly. Neither am I concerned at this time as to where the universal complaint has come from. We know it is here. But I bottom my objection to the Government doing this business on the principle that the Government has no right to go into any business at all. It was never organized to enter business in competition with its citizens. I think it ought to go out of it and let the printers of the country print the envelopes, even though the envelopes do cost the consumer a little more.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the gentleman object to the Government conducting the Printing Office in Washington?

Mr. COX of Indiana. No; I do not. I do not think that is a fair comparison in the question now under consideration. That is simply the Government doing its own business. Here is a case where the Government is doing business for private individuals. I do hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska or the gentleman from Minnesota will obtain.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he, as a member of the Post-Office Committee, believes an existing contract should be disturbed?

Mr. COX of Indiana. No; I do not.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Will the gentleman tell us when that contract expires?

Mr. COX of Indiana. It is for four years, and expires in March, 1911.

Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the Government going into the manufacture of envelopes with return cards printed thereon, in competition with the printers of the country, can not be defended upon any ground whatever. It can not be defended upon the ground of economy, because it is very doubtful if the Government makes any money out of it at all.

I am equally sure it can not be defended upon the ground of principle. It never was intended by the founders of our Government that the Government should go into any business whatever in competition with any of its citizens. The original purpose for which the Government was founded was to govern the people, and when it enters into manufacturing business of any kind it has departed a long ways from the original purposes for which it was created. The Government might just as well go into the manufacture of ink, boots, shoes, or the steel business, or any other general line of manufacturing, as to go into the manufacture of envelopes, which is in open competition to the local printers of the country.

They have a right to condemn this practice on the part of the Government, and I am indeed glad to see them stand up for their rights and to make a fight all along the line. It may probably serve a splendid object lesson in the future to learn the Government to keep out of this line of business, as well as other lines of manufacturing. It is not the amount of money involved here one way or other, but it is a principle, and that principle is to get the Government back to the place of its origin and birth, stick to the purposes for which it was organized, that of governing of people, instead of entering the manufacturing business. The amendments offered by the gentlemen of Nebraska and Minnesota, if carried, will put an end to this kind of practice on the part of the Government.

So far as a violation of the present contract is concerned, which the Government has with the Dayton people, I do not believe that the amendments will violate or destroy these contracts. But this is another question which we can easily meet when we get to it. Let us meet the one now in issue, and that is to prevent the Government from manufacturing envelopes for private individuals. The Government for several years has been telling the people how it has been breaking up and smashing trusts and combinations of different kinds through the courts and otherwise, yet here it is under and beneath one of the biggest monopolies in the printing business there is in the United States. Let the little country editor have some of this work. He can do it and do it successfully, and for years he has been held out of this part of the printing, which the Government has all the time been putting in the hands of the large monopoly at Dayton, and yet during all this period of time the little country editor has been depended upon to do the real downright hard fighting in each and every campaign, with no pay or tribute to him whatever.

Mr. Chairman, I am tired of seeing flashed in the different post-offices of this country an advertisement on the part of the Government that they can print these envelopes cheaper than any country editor. For one I am in favor of doing away with this monopoly, trimming its sails by withholding any appropriation for it, and let this printing go out to the country. While it will not be much even for the country editors, but it will be an open recognition of their right to enter the field of competition and bid for this work. To adopt these amendments will be absolute justice to the country editor and justice to the Government as well.

The class of people who purchase envelopes manufactured by the Government are large manufacturers and heavy users of envelopes, because the Government only agrees to furnish them in quantities of 500 or more. The smaller users of envelopes have them printed by the country editors and papers. I say let them print all of them. Let the business man go to the country editor and have him print his envelopes, just like the people go to the country editor and have theirs printed. A fair deal is all that I ask, and I ask this not only for the country editor, but for the people who do not use envelopes in such large quantities as the large business man. Take this printing entirely out of the hands of the monopoly at Dayton, Ohio, and in doing so we will give everybody a square deal. We will put them all on a par, but giving equal and exact justice to all, with special privileges to none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the question whether the printers want this or not, or whether there is a monopoly, does not interest me so much as the question whether the United States shall keep its contracts inviolate. The gentleman from Nebraska did not answer the question that was asked him, whether the Government had made contracts for envelopes. It has made a contract to take all the envelopes with printed returns that are ordered through the Post-Office Department for the length of this contract. The United States Government is just as much obligated to take those as to take the stamped envelopes. They have made that contract with that corporation that had to create its plant in order to take the contract away from somebody else. It is a contract that neither one of the gentlemen who are clamoring here would back out of if made with him individually and he had the power, and that makes this not only a change of law but a repudiation of the contract which the Government has made. You may vote it out of this appropriation, you may say that you will not appropriate money for that purpose, but every gentleman here knows that if these contractors receive the orders according to their contracts for printing these envelopes, it is a valid claim against the Government of the United States and must be paid.

Shall we be placed here by the hysteria that has taken possession of this committee, the hysteria that is abroad in the land, to repudiate a solemn, existing obligation by the Government of the United States? That is the question that appeals to me. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this proposition is not going to be decided on the hysteria of the moment, nor will those who are opposing it be able to gloss over the real issue by trying to raise sectional feeling. This question has been before the public for years, and has been growing, until to-day the printers of the country demand fair and impartial treatment. We have called upon the department, we have called upon the contractors, to present the contract, but those who are most directly interested come into this House and only present the specifications. I venture to say that there is nothing in the contract which compels the Government to purchase any number of any designated character of envelopes; that there is nothing in the contract that makes it obligatory on the Government that it shall purchase so many envelopes with return cards thereon within a certain time; but the contract merely provides that they shall be printed at a certain rate. What do the specifications provide? The printers are raising objections to the unfair provisions because the specifications do not call for separate quotations for the envelope with the return card and those without. The department claims there is a profit arising from this contract, because the contract price is but 78.6 cents per thousand and they are sold for $1.24 per thousand. The department fails to take into consideration the excess cost that arises from the transportation of these envelopes through the mails. For years we have been endeavoring to take these large shipments out of the mails, so as to lessen the railway mail pay, but only this year the committee learned that all of these envelopes except when in carload lots are sent through the mails.

What does the evidence as presented by the contractors themselves show? That the majority of these are in small lots of 500, and the representative of the department, the present Acting Third Assistant Postmaster-General, claims that when they change the type for every 500 lot it does not occasion any extra expense. That contention needs no refutation. Lest there be some misunderstanding in this committee by reason of the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox], who represents the district where the manufactory is located, let me call to the attention of the House the exact percentage of the various kinds of envelopes now made, according to the letter of the president of the company. Thirty-four per cent are plain, 27 per cent contain the blank return card of the post-office or rural-delivery route, and 38 per cent comprise those to which the protest is raised. This is a question of principle before this committee. Shall the Government enter into competition with the private contractors all over the country? You can not defend it on the ground that it saves expense to the Dead-Letter Office, or else, by the same argument, you would have the private contractor who prints the return postal cards print the return name of the sender on those cards, whenever there would be a demand for that, to the extent of 500.

This practice was discontinued once. This demand for its discontinuance has been growing. It is not stimulated by the opposition of the Hartford company, but it is stimulated by the fact that it is wrong in principle and should be curtailed now and for all time. It is not violative of the contract. These stamped envelopes without the printed return card will be used in the future. The contractor will have no claim against this Government if this amendment is adopted, and I call upon those who believe in fair competition to indorse this amendment.

Mr. PICKETT. Is it true that the gentleman requested to see a copy of this contract as a member of the committee having this matter in charge, and that he was refused?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have asked in a general way to have the contract presented, but it has not been shown to me, and I question whether it has been presented to any member of the committee.

Mr. PICKETT. Did the gentleman make that request of this company who holds the contract?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I have been too busy with other matters to make any such request as that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, this is what I call legislation by hysteria. There is not a Member on this floor who knows what the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] or the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will be. This is an old business. The Government has been buying these envelopes for fifty-seven years. It has been buying envelopes with the stamped return for forty-five years. The question has been repeatedly agitated. Congressional committees have reported upon it, and there never has been such a report made that it has not recommended that the practice ought to continue. At one time there was some such scene as this in the House, and some such amendment as this was passed; but there was such a hue and cry raised by those who used the envelopes that the bill was repealed the very next year, and ever since this practice has continued. This does not affect the paper maker, because the Dayton (Ohio) concern—and I want to say that I am playing no favorites, for I do not care whether these are made in New England or Ohio—the Dayton (Ohio) concern buys its paper in the open market. It does not affect the printer, because the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH], who has been in the business of printing for twenty-three years, stated here on Saturday that he never had printed an envelope. It affects the envelope maker. Envelope makers not only make the envelopes, but they print the returns, and 90 per cent of all the envelopes used have a return printed upon them. The truth of the matter is that some enterprising gentlemen have gotten together and created this agitation. I do not know who they are, though I think I do; but I find something here in a paper called the Paper Mill to this effect, that it was decided "that the committee should engage the services of a recording secretary and a competent office force, and engage an office in Washington and start off on a campaign of education and publicity."

Mr. Chairman, every Member of this House will testify to the fact that that campaign of education and publicity has been followed up pretty diligently for the last thirty days.

There is now a bill which will do what these people want done pending in the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I object to legislation that may possibly abrogate a contract being considered on the floor of the House without proper deliberation. These matters should be heard in the committee and the committee should report. I presume the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads may be opposed to continuing this contract, but even so, I say, let the department, the contractors, and everybody interested appear before that committee, and let us pass on this legislation deliberately, rather than in this hysterical way.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads report this proviso without consideration?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to repeat what happened in the committee, but I will say the committee has given no hearings to anyone on that subject and has no evidence before it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman say that the result of this clause in the bill was not after consideration by the committee?

Mr. WEEKS. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is an embarrassing question to ask, but it was adopted by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman if this would not be a satisfactory arrangement: If he wants to have a hearing in his committee on the bill to which he refers, I think there will be no question but what the bill would pass the House unanimously if he were to report in with it the proviso that is on page 26, and also include another section that would repeal this particular clause, but for safety let us put it in now and let the gentleman bring in the bill later on.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, as far as I can say for the committee, a hearing will be given on the Tou Velle bill, or any other bill, and if the committee reports in favor of terminating this method of conducting this business, why, the House will have some evidence on which to act.

Mr. SISSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. You will find section 97, as it applies to this matter, seems to leave it optional to the Postmaster-General about what contract he might make, but it says that no contract shall be made except upon requisition for envelopes. If that be true, there can be no repudiation of a contract by the passage of this amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. I think the gentleman is right to that extent.

Mr. SISSON. I would like for the committee to hear the section read. Section 96 reads:

> The Postmaster-General shall contract for all envelopes, stamped and otherwise, designed for sale to the public or for use by his or any other department, and make contract for them to be plain or with such printed matter as may be prescribed by the department making requisition therefor.

Mr. WEEKS. Now, Mr. Chairman, just one word more. I do no dispute the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi, but I want to call attention to the fact that of the envelopes that are printed 1,200,000 are plain, no printing on them at all, and about 1,000,000 are printed for return to rural routes or return to the town, and the balance of something like 40 per cent have printed on them the return to the name and the place, and I contend that as this company is organized and has raised its capital of $600,000 for the purpose of manufacturing these envelopes under certain definite conditions for four years, that it will be a distinct wrong to them to make any change whatever until the contract terminates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired and the time for debate has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Would it be in order to withdraw my substitute and offer as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska the last four lines, or the proviso, at the bottom of my proposed substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the gentleman can do that by unanimous consent and only by unanimous consent. The question comes first on the substitute offered by the gentleman——

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the proposed substitute the following:

"And provided further, That this provision shall in no way interfere with or prevent the carrying out of any existing contract entered into by the Government relative to the printing and manufacture of envelopes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. The amendments and the substitute, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will first report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendments and the substitute were again reported.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the Norris amendment still pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It is still pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GAINES. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 93; noes 41.

So the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, as amended.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there any use now in voting for either the substitute or amendment? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The question was taken, and the substitute as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to return to page 25, lines 20 to 22, both inclusive, for the purpose of making an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have permission to make an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph to which the committee has, by unanimous consent, returned——

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the Chair to so announce.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understood, the gentleman received permission to make an inquiry without returning to the paragraph referred to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the Chair that I did not so understand it.

The paragraph that I have mentioned, however, provides for the manufacture of adhesive postage stamps, special-delivery stamps, books of stamps, and for coiling of stamps, $620,000. I had hoped to have the opportunity of offering an amendment to this paragraph when it was read, but I was temporarily absent from the floor. In view of legislation which we will have to provide for in relation to the printing of postage stamps, I want the Members to understand what the facts were, before the report on the sundry civil bill, which carries an appropriation for this purpose, is made.

The paragraph, as a matter of fact, ought to have been eliminated from this bill. I will say that the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury, in a communication addressed to me a few days ago, stated that an agreement had been reached between them. The difficulty about the matter is this: Under a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury last summer the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was no longer permitted to reimburse its appropriation from the proceeds of the appropriation carried in the post-office appropriation bill. The comptroller held that whatever was earned by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing under its contract with the Post-Office Department had to be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the general fund. That being the case, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing would have been obliged to have stopped the printing of postage stamps entirely had not Congress been in session and provided relief in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was passed at the extra session of this Congress, in which bill this language was adopted by Congress for the purpose of temporarily tiding over the situation for the year 1910:

During the fiscal year 1910 all proceeds derived from work performed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, by the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, not covered and embraced in the appropriation for said bureau for the said fiscal year, instead of being covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, as provided in the act of August 24, 1886 (24 Stats., 227), be credited, when received, to the appropriation for said bureau for the fiscal year 1910.

Now, that provides for this fiscal year; but some provision must be made for the next fiscal year. There is only one of two ways that the proposition can be met—either appropriating $620,000 in the post-office appropriation bill for the printing of adhesive stamps and then duplicating that appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, in order to enable that bureau to do the work of printing these postage stamps, or authorize the reimbursement of the appropriation to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing such as is expended by that bureau in doing the work under the contract with the Post-Office Department in the manufacture of postage stamps.

Mr. MANN. Is not that a simple matter to do?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it is a very simple matter to do; but I for one do not propose to make appropriations in that way, unless it is absolutely necessary, and I am not in favor of that in this case, because there is not any profit. It is said that there is a profit. Any profit it might make in doing any of this outside work—and it is doing a great deal—would, of course, inure to the benefit of the appropriation for the Bureau of Printing and Engraving and increase its appropriation to that extent. Now, my proposition, if I could get unanimous consent to return to the paragraph, would be to strike out, in accordance with the agreement of the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury, this amount and this appropriation made for the manufacture of these stamps. It would be a very simple matter.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it desirable, in making an appropriation for the postal service, not to include all the items of expense for the maintenance of the service outside of the salaries of certain officials in one bureau, so that afterwards nobody can tell what the postal service is costing?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say in reply to that, so long as the deficit in the postal service exists, and it must be made up from the Treasury of the United States out of the general fund, I do not see that there is any particular advantage in carrying this appropriation in the post-office appropriation bill, and make it necessary for us to adopt legislation in regard to the work of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving that in my judgment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. MANN. If you could have the items of this bill in some other bills, there would be no means of knowing what is appropriated for this service.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would say in reply to that if a provision were made in the sundry civil bill that the Treasury of the United States should be reimbursed out of the receipts of the Post-Office Department, if those receipts were equal to the expenditures, there would be then certainly no objection.

Mr. MANN. Now, I would like to know by what right is the post-office running up a deficit by providing that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall increase that deficit by making a profit on the printing of these postage stamps.

Mr. TAWNEY. Because they entered into a contract with the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, which enables that bureau to make something of a profit now on account of changes in the methods of printing and manufacturing these stamps which have been brought about in the last year.

Mr. MANN. Is that profit made by the Government in one branch of the service from another branch of the service taken into account when you figure the deficit in the post-office?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. MANN. Then, when you come to the items, it makes no difference whether the item is to be appropriated to them or to anybody else.

Mr. TAWNEY. I assume that it is going to be continued against my wish.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had leave to make an inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, my inquiry was as to whether I could have unanimous consent to return to this paragraph for the purpose of striking out the language that I have referred to in the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. You can not get it.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to make this comment: Without regard to any agreement of departmental officials, I venture the opinion that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads would not consent to have any part of the appropriation that goes to maintain that department transferred to some other appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That from and after June 30, 1911, it shall be unlawful for the Post-Office Department, or any officer, head of bureau, or chief of division thereof, to print or have printed, or sell or offer to sell any stamped envelope bearing upon it a printed direction giving the name of any individual, firm, or company, or any number of any post-office box or drawer, or any street number or the name of any building to which it shall be returned if uncalled for or undelivered: Provided further, That this shall not apply to those envelopes printed with a return card left blank as to name, address, box, drawer, street number, or building, and which only give the name of the town or city, with the State, District, or Territory.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the paragraph, on the ground that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of limited indemnity for the loss of pieces of first-class domestic registered matter, $15,000.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 27, line 7, strike out "first;" also, after the word "matter," strike out "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five."

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, does not the point of order come too late? Has not the discussion begun?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks it is too late. He thinks the point of order is in time. Would the gentleman like a ruling on the point of order before he discusses his amendment?

Mr. HOBSON. No. I should like to discuss the point of order, though, after I have my five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment would be to extend the limited indemnity to all registered matter, which is clearly reasonable. If the Government undertakes to register any mail matter, it should hold itself liable for its loss. Furthermore, it would be profitable so to extend this practice of the Government. Not only do the express companies now hold themselves responsible for such matter, but insurance companies have begun to do the same. There is an insurance company in Philadelphia that advertises to hold itself liable for the delivery of mail packages, upon a payment of 2½ cents for $2, 5 cents for $15, 10 cents for $30.

I notice that the appropriation under this clause is but $15,000 as provided in the bill, which is $10,000 less than it was last year, indicating that the Government is already losing its profits from registration and is being encroached upon, and is liable to be still further encroached upon as the years go by.

It is, in the next place, shown further that the mail matter that is sent abroad under registration has the limited indemnity clause. Furthermore, it is the practice of all the governments of the world. The British Government, for instance, begins with a charge of 8 cents for a limited indemnity of $60, and then it increases $60 more for each increase of 4 cents, until at last there is an indemnity of $2,000, and it applies to all matter. This amendment is simply in line of the legitimate development of the registration of the country for the good of the citizens and for the profit of the Government, and will check this private invasion of the Government's legitimate monopoly, which invasion ought to be prevented.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that this is necessarily subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin as to whether this changes existing law. What is the existing law on the subject?

Mr. STAFFORD. In response to the inquiry I will say that I am under the impression that the law limiting the indemnity for registered mail——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have his attention called to any law by which this indemnity is limited to first-class domestic registered matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I reserved the point of order I was under the impression that the law restricted indemnity to first-class matter. I have been endeavoring to find the law, and have requested the clerk of the committee to find it, but up to the present time we have not been able to find the exact authorization for this character of service. So I can not inform the Chairman whether that is the fact or not. I will read the following, however, which has just been called to my attention, and is found in Postal Laws and Regulations, on page 422, section 899:

As a part of such system of registration he (the Postmaster-General) may provide rules under which the sender or owner of first-class registered matter shall be indemnified for loss thereof in the mails, the indemnity to be paid out of the postal revenues, but in no case to exceed $10 for any one registered piece, or the actual value thereof when it is less than $10, and for which no other compensation or reimbursement to the loser has been made: Provided, That the Post-Office Department or its revenues shall not be liable for the loss of any other mail matter on account of its having been registered.

According to the notation in the column, that is section 3926 of the Revised Statutes. If the law has not been changed since then, and it is my impression that it has not, you will notice that the law restricts the payment of indemnity to first-class matter. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would be to extend it to all classes of matter, and therefore I believe the point of order is well taken.

Mr. FINLEY. My recollection is that the amount of the indemnity provided has been raised within the last year, or the year before last, in an appropriation bill from $10 to $50.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question but that the law as to the amount has been increased not to exceed $100, and the Post-Office Department, by regulation, is paying as a limit $50, but I am not aware that the law has been changed by extending it to other classes of mail.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think that it has.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, in this matter I submit that the gentleman has not shown the full law on the subject; that there has been legislation since the law to which he refers. Furthermore, if there had not been such legislation, the original legislation under which the Postmaster-General has the right to establish regulations would apply to second or third class matter as well as to first-class matter, and this is simply founded on the part of the law that antedates the law which has been cited by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I claim that it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to supplement what I have said. What I read was in small type in the post-office regulations, and what is there printed in small type is law and not regulation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin give the Chair the section of the Revised Statutes to which he refers?

Mr. STAFFORD. Section 3926 of the Revised Statutes, and the statute of February 27, 1897, being chapter 340, as found in Second Supplement, page 564, of the Revised Statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the situation it is that the Postmaster-General is given authority by law to pay certain indemnity relative to first-class matter. The gentleman from Alabama attempts to change that by striking out the word "first-class," but does not call the attention of the Chair to any change of law since the enactment of that cited by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, but I believe that section 3926, page 564, of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes throws some light on it. I will read it:

SEC. 3926. For the greater security of valuable mail matter the Postmaster-General may establish a uniform system of registration, and as a part of such system he may provide rates under which the sender or owner of first-class registered matter shall be indemnified for losses thereof in the mails, the indemnity to be paid out of the postal revenues, and in no case to exceed $10 for any one registered piece for the actual value thereof when that is less than $10 and for which no other compensation or reimbursement to the loser has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Indiana thinks that the indemnity is limited to first-class matter?

Mr. COX of Indiana. It would seem so.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1910 of $10,000 for the employment of special counsel to prosecute and defend suits affecting the second-class mailing privilege is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1911.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 37, line 16, strike out "ten" in 1910, and insert "nine," so as to read "1909."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For blanks, blank books, printed and engraved matter, binding and carbon paper for the money-order service, $150,000.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee where this work will be done, whether in the Government Printing Office or given out by contract?

Mr. WEEKS. I think all the work done under that paragraph is done by contract.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and offer another.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman withdraws his pro forma amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "manner," in line 6, the word "and," and after the word "binding," in line 7, the words "to be provided by the Public Printer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. To that I reserve a point of order. Let us have the paragraph reported as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For blank books, printed and engraved matter, and binding to be provided by the Public Printer, and carbon paper for the money-order service.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania like to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to provide that the blanks, blank books, printed and engraved matter, and binding shall be done in the Government Printing Office. That is the sole purpose of the amendment, and inasmuch as we have organized and maintain a large printing establishment for government purpose, it seems to me reasonable that this work should be done in that place.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Supplies for the City Delivery Service, including letter boxes, letter-box fasteners, package boxes, posts, furniture, satchels, straps, baskets, time cards, time-card frames, time-recorder supplies, maps, transfer designs, and stencils, $90,000. That hereafter the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, enter into contracts for a period of not exceeding four years for equipment for the collection and delivery of mail in the City Delivery Service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking what has been the custom heretofore in reference to making contracts for the collection and delivery of mail, and what is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, the committee understands that the attorney-general of the Post-Office Department has instructed the department that it has no authority to make a contract for that purpose for a longer time than one year, and it is the purpose of the added portion to the paragraph to give the Postmaster-General power to make contracts for four years.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, they have exercised the power heretofore, and the custom has been to make four-year contracts.

Mr. WEEKS. I think that is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us be sure about that.

Mr. MANN. I know they do.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to confirm the statement that that is a fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Contracts for the wagons?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; contracts for the supplies included in this item.

Mr. MANN. They make a four-year contract now for the renting or employment of horses in the city of Chicago for the collection of the mail.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what this particular language has in mind.

Mr. WEEKS. That is for the screen-wagon service, and that is specially provided for.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of the screen-wagon service. I am speaking of the delivery of mail between the post-office and the stations, and where they have to in the suburban districts of Chicago.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman is mistaken. That is covered in another section of the bill. This applies exclusively to supplies for the city delivery office.

Mr. MANN. I only know they make four-year contracts on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. This relates to the equipment that is stated in the bill, including letter boxes, letter-box fasteners, and so forth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That does not apply to that.

Mr. MANN. Assuming this proviso or extension of authority applies to the paragraph under consideration, has the gentleman any information as to whether the Government can purchase these supplies any cheaper on the four-year contract than they can under a yearly contract?

Mr. WEEKS. The Government can certainly make a contract for delivery and collection service cheaper on a four-year basis than on a one-year basis.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says that does not apply to this service.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me read the recommendation of the Post-Office Department:

Contracts for automobile and horse equipments to be employed in the collection and delivery of mail matter by carriers and for the collection of mail by means of letter boxes attached to street cars are in force in a number of cities. The automobiles need to be provided with specially designed bodies, while the wagons are of a pattern adapted only to this purpose. The desirability, from the point of view of both the contractor and the department, of entering into such contracts for five-year periods is therefore apparent. Observance of the rule that these contracts shall not be for a longer term than that covered by an appropriation already made occasions serious embarrassment and necessarily adds to the cost of the service in question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This does not apply at all to the articles enumerated in the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. No. It is true that this authority here is intended entirely to obviate a decision of the comptroller, and that the custom of the department heretofore of making four-year contracts, where it was necessary to make contracts at all, for horses and wagons for collecting the mail may now be kept up, and I think it far preferable to make four-year contracts than one-year contracts, because you can not expect to get this equipment furnished on one-year contracts at a reasonable cost.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say, in reply to the criticism of the gentleman from New York, that the phraseology is especially limited to equipment for collection and delivery of mail in City Delivery Service, and can not be extended to any other character of service——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, but it does not apply to the items enumerated in the paragraph, which the gentleman insisted was the fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that in construing both together the comptroller would naturally hold that the word "equipment," following the individual designations, would be held to refer to the character of equipment that precedes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then this language would be absolutely futile and it would not accomplish what was intended, because this is not the character of supplies intended to be covered by the four-year contract?

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the whole difficulty here has arisen from an inadvertance in the Government Printing Office in putting these two paragraphs in one paragraph. This extension of authority if left in the bill ought to be a paragraph by itself clearly, because in the way it is drawn here it might be held to apply to the question of letter-box fasteners.

Mr. STAFFORD. It seems to me it is limited to the equipment described in the paragraph.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he knows, as a matter of fact, that this authority to make contracts for four years does apply to the equipment that is used in the transportation between post-offices and stations, and between stations and post-offices, or whether it simply applies to the items enumerated above the authority granted.

Mr. WEEKS. The contracts for carrying the mail are made for four years; that is, for carrying mail between post-offices and stations in large cities. This is called the screen-wagon service, and those contracts are always made for four years.

Mr. MADDEN. Does this cover that case?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think this covers the same case; this is for a different service.

Mr. MADDEN. Then it ought not to apply at all if it does not cover the same case, and I will make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, and move that the words in line 19, page 28—and so forth, be inserted as a paragraph, so as to be a separate paragraph.

That hereafter the Postmaster-General—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the other gentleman from Illinois withdraw the point of order, so the amendment may be offered?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before the point of order is withdrawn, I will make the point of order, unless I can find out exactly what it is intended to cover. The chairman of the committee says it is intended to cover one purpose and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], another member of the committee, says it is intended to cover an entirely different purpose.

Mr. MANN. I have told you what it would cover, and the gentleman ought to be informed now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has somewhat fallen into disrepute to-day, because several gentlemen have contradicted the accuracy of his statements.

Mr. MANN. But not enough of them.

Mr. WEEKS. There is no question that this is for the purpose of collecting mail and for the delivery of mail in large cities.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this is intended to permit contracts for four years to be made for supplies indicated in the paragraph, I shall make the point of order against it.

Mr. WEEKS. It is not so intended, Mr. Chairman, and I make no objection to making a separate paragraph of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I will not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order made on the entire paragraph?

Mr. MANN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought the point of order was withdrawn on the condition——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from Massachusetts has agreed to that.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the portion of the paragraph which is new be made a separate paragraph, commencing with the words "that hereafter," in line 19, and continuing for the rest of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the words beginning with "that hereafter" be considered as in a separate paragraph. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMLIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. What paragraph are we now considering?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now considering paragraph on page 28, lines 15 to 19.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, enter into contracts for a period of not exceeding four years for equipment for the collection and delivery of mail in the City Delivery Service.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two. Now, then, the paragraph just read includes the contract for the delivery or collection of the mails in the cities, does it?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. It would include the collection of the mails, in the manner that was discussed here the other day, by automobile service?

Mr. WEEKS. I think it would.

Mr. HAMLIN. And is the Postmaster-General now authorized by existing law to contract for longer than one year?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think he is, Mr. Chairman; but I think it has been done.

Mr. HAMLIN. And the adoption of this paragraph would be a change of existing law, would it not?

Mr. WEEKS. I think the adoption of this paragraph, Mr. Chairman, would enable him to make four-year contracts for this service.

Mr. HAMLIN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will not make it. It will be economy to leave it as it is.

Mr. HAMLIN. The paragraph is really a change of existing law——

Mr. MANN. To what is the point of order made?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made to that portion of the paragraph beginning with the word "That," in line 19, down to and including the word "service," in line 22.

Mr. MANN. That point of order comes too late. We had the point of order made and withdrawn, and asked unanimous consent after that to make that a separate paragraph. The Clerk reported it for the purpose of seeing whether unanimous consent would be granted. The point of order can not be made on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri to reserve the point of order on that portion of the paragraph beginning with the word "That," in line 19, and down to and including the word "service," in line 22, as soon as the request was granted that it be considered as a separate paragraph. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the Chair that when the point of order was made it was a part of another paragraph. The point of order was withdrawn in order that a separation might be made and that this might be made a separate paragraph. A point of order will certainly lie when it is read as an independent paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, $37,645,000: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations: Provided further, That the Postmaster-General shall require from carriers, Rural Delivery Service, a return of the number, approximate weight of unmailable packages carried by them, and the compensation received therefor, for a period of three months, beginning July 1, 1910, and shall report the result of this inquiry to Congress not later than December 10, 1910: And provided further, That the Post-Office Department shall investigate and report to Congress not later than December 10, 1910, its conclusion as to the advisability of the transferring of the Rural Delivery Service and the star-route service to one bureau, its conclusion as to the advisability of a classification of the Rural Delivery Service, taking into consideration mileage, climatic conditions, condition of roads, the local cost of animals and feed, and any other facts which bear on a reorganization and improvement of this service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in twenty minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is correct. No amendments are in order except by unanimous consent, until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask to what portion the gentleman directs his point of order. Is it to the whole paragraph?

Mr. MANN. No amendments are in order now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserve the point of order on the paragraph?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on the proviso in line 11, page 30, down to the end of the paragraph, so that if they desire to offer amendments to the rest of it, they can do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to reserve the point of order on certain lines of the paragraph?

Mr. MANN. Commencing on line 11, page 30, to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the point of order is sustained to a part of the paragraph, will not the whole paragraph go out?

The CHAIRMAN. Not if the point of order is made as to certain lines of the paragraph. If the point of order is made to the whole paragraph, it would go out. Is it the desire of the committee that amendments be offered and that debate continue while the point of order is reserved on the lines specified by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. KEIFER. I think, Mr. Chairman, that ought not to be so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina, a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 30, after the words "mail-delivery service," on line 7, by striking out the words "thirty-seven million six hundred and forty-five thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-eight million one hundred and forty-five thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], a member of the committee.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SMALL. I move to insert "$38,860,000," and when I have the floor I desire to address myself to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

Strike out "$38,145,000" and insert "$38,860,000."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit to the committee a few facts in justification of this amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. The amendment which I offer makes the amount $38,860,000, which is one and a half millions greater than the appropriation for the current year. I wish to emphasize this statement in the beginning: That this additional amount is only sufficient to establish and install the rural-delivery routes which will have been favorably reported and will be ready for installation on the 30th of June of this year, and will not provide for the establishment of any routes during the year ending June 30, 1911, for which year this appropriation bill is applicable.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman, who, I understand, is a member of this committee, whether the amount carried in this bill will be sufficient to pay the letter carriers the salaries that they are entitled to by present law?

Mr. SMALL. The paragraph under consideration does not affect the salaries of the rural carriers. It only provides for the extension of the service to meet the normal demand for additional rural routes.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that it will. Your proposition is merely to increase the amount?

Mr. SMALL. Not increase the salaries, but increase the rural routes.

Mr. KEIFER. To provide for the extension of the service?

Mr. SMALL. To provide for the extension of the service. Now, Mr. Chairman, the appropriation available for the current year ending June 30 is $37,360,000, and that was an increase over the appropriation for the year 1909 of $1,787,000. The average increase for every year during the thirteen years since this service has been in existence has been $2,637,864.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. Is it not a fact that there have now been approved some 1,500 applications for new routes?

Mr. SMALL. Not quite that many at the present time, but there will be more than 1,500 by the end of the current year, and I am coming to that statement in a minute.

Mr. YOUNG of Michigan. And that will require the increase the gentleman has provided for?

Mr. SMALL. That is true. There has been an average annual growth of 2,935 routes since the service was established. Now the increase carried in this bill amounts to only $285,000, which would only provide for 578 routes. I desire to submit to the committee some further reasons why we ought to increase the appropriation by at least a million and a half dollars, as contemplated in the amendment which I offer.

According to the statement made by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General before the committee when this item was under consideration, there were at that time—January 10 of this year—977 routes which were ready for installation. He further stated that there were at that time 672 petitions which had been favorably passed upon for investigation and which at that time were in the field for investigation, and that probably it was fair to expect that 56 per cent would be favorably reported and approved by the department for installation, making 376 more. He further stated that, judging by the past, there would be something like 900 more petitions filed in the department before June 30 of this year, and that according to past experience there would be 37 per cent of those which would be favorably reported and recommended for installation. Assume that only 33⅓ per cent will be approved, and that gives 300 more routes. So that on the 30th of June, this year, it is fair to anticipate that there will be 1,653 rural routes approved and ready for installation. In the face of this condition, see how meager the increase of $285,000 would be. This amount would only provide for 578 routes out of 1,653 ready and awaiting the order of installation.

According to the figures furnished by the department, the average cost of each route is $72.17 per month, or $866.04 per year. If none of these 1,653 routes shall be installed during the current year, but should be established on July 1, then there would be required for their maintenance during the ensuing fiscal year the sum of $1,431,564. I submit that these figures prove the proposition that substantially a million and a half dollars is necessary to install the routes which will have been favorably reported and will be ready for installation on the 1st day of July of this year.

Now, what is the reason alleged for the curtailment of the rural service? The only plea which has been submitted is the condition of the Treasury. I have before me here a letter from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, written in answer to a communication which I made to him asking why a route which had been favorably reported on and which was ready for installment could not be established. This is his reply:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, January 24, 1910.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 20th instant, urging early action toward the establishment of proposed rural route No. 2 from Parmele, N. C.

In reply you are advised that in view of the existing condition of the finances of the Government, and the consequent necessity for strict economy in all branches of the public service, it is deemed advisable, after careful consideration, to defer further installation of rural delivery for the present, except where necessary to maintain the efficiency of the service in operation or where the establishment of new service seems imperatively required to meet demands which can not be met by means of existing facilities.

Information as to when proposed route No. 2 from Parmele, N. C., will probably be installed can not, therefore, be given at this time.

Respectfully,

P. V. DE GRAW,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

I presume that other Members have received substantially similar letters.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I want to say to the gentleman that I have received letters of the same character. I have in my district two routes which were favorably reported upon and recommended for installment in May last, but they were only installed in February of this year; and the reason given for the delay was the same as that given in the letter which the gentleman has just read.

Mr. SMALL. I have no doubt there are other Members who have received similar letters.

[The time of Mr. SMALL having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. SMALL. It was stated by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General before the committee that since the beginning of this fiscal year not a single route had been established the petition for which had been filed during this fiscal year.

Mr. SIMS. Is it wholly within the discretion of the department as to whether it will establish routes or not?

Mr. SMALL. I do not think so. I think the inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee is absolutely pertinent. I do not know who assumes authority to give directions for the stopping of the establishment of rural service. There was no evidence before the committee that any official other than the officials of the Post-Office had done so.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. While the gentleman says that in his opinion it is not the law, that it is entirely within the discretion of the Post-Office Department, is it not to all practical intents and purposes within their power, or do they not exercise the discretionary power of locating these routes or withholding them as they see fit?

Mr. SMALL. In answer to the gentleman I will say that we have very little statute law upon the question of rural service, but it is as firmly imbedded in the system of our postal service as any other feature of it.

Now, it was further stated by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General that he estimated there would be at the end of this fiscal year $245,000 of surplus to be carried over; but upon inquiry it developed that that surplus which he anticipated could only be carried over by the failure and refusal to establish another rural route between now and the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose we make the appropriation; if the department assumes arbitrarily to say whether it will spend it or not, what good will it do?

Mr. SMALL. That is true, and in answer to that I will say that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General was asked that question, and his reply was that he would continue to refuse to expend the money now available, amounting to about $250,000, and would not establish any more rural routes unless Congress directed to the contrary. Whether he will take an increase of this appropriation as a mandate, or whether he will require more specific authority, I am unable to state.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is to say, a mere increase of the appropriation by the gentleman's amendment will not of necessity increase either the number of rural routes or the salaries of rural carriers. Is that what I understand the gentleman to mean?

Mr. SMALL. This amendment is not intended to affect the salaries of rural carriers, but only to provide for an extension of the rural service in response to the normal and steady demand for same from the farmers. If it is desired to increase the salaries of the rural carriers, another amendment may be offered at the proper time.

Mr. HINSHAW. Can any amendment which we put on here, in amount merely, increase the salaries of carriers, without further change of law?

Mr. SMALL. Not as to this paragraph. An increase of salaries must be specifically provided for. Whether or not it is subject to a point of order I am not able to say, but it will require another amendment. But that is not the point now under consideration. I am speaking of the willful and deliberate attempt on the part of the Post-Office Department to refuse to expend an appropriation now available in the extension of the rural service when admittedly they have $250,000 for that purpose.

Mr. CANDLER. Let me ask the gentleman, would it not be better to put in the word "shall," so that the department would be required to expend the appropriation? When the service first started they inserted that word, and I think it would be well to do it now.

Mr. SMALL. I think that is worthy of serious consideration.

[The time of Mr. SMALL having expired, by unanimous consent he was given two minutes more.]

Mr. SMALL. I do not desire to detain the committee longer, except to repeat the original proposition I laid down, that one and a half million dollars is necessary as an increase over the appropriation for the current year in order to establish the number of rural routes which will have been approved and ready for installation on June 30 of this year; and that it will not provide substantially for any additional routes during the next fiscal year, because, as I showed you by the testimony before the Post-Office Committee, there are now all ready for installation 977 routes, and there are in the field enough to yield 356 more; and petitions and investigations between now and June 30 will result in favorable reports on at least 300 more, making a total of 1,653 routes at the end of the present fiscal year ready to be installed. Let those gentlemen who vote against this increased appropriation as embraced in my amendment understand that they are voting against the extension of the rural service. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "thirty-eight million one hundred and forty-five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty-four million seven hundred and seventy-three thousand seven hundred and thirty-six."

Mr. WEEKS. To that I reserve a point of order. I want to say that the committee, with the exception of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], is in favor of the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21419, the post-office appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INFORMATION RELATIVE TO LANDS IN OZARK NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up a privileged resolution (H. Res. 332), referred to the committee January 6, 1910, and ask for its present consideration.

House resolution 332.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Ferguson, of the army, to report it, not adversely, but with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, it covering the same subject as Senate bill 1021.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order requested will be entered.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19028) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 357) thereon.

RECORDS OF THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 6991) to authorize the compilation of the military and naval records of the Revolutionary war with a view to their publication, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WETMORE. To accompany the bill, I present a memorial of the Society of the Cincinnati, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The Society of the Cincinnati respectfully prays the Congress to cause the military and naval orders, reports, correspondence, and records of the Revolutionary war to be collected and published in like manner as have been published those of the civil war of 1861–1865.

Many of these reports are widely dispersed among the original 13 States and in England, France, and Canada, and in private hands; a part of those in the possession of the General Government was unfortunately destroyed, and every year they are allowed to remain thus scattered and uncared for adds to the loss of these precious memorials.

Your memorialists believe that the publication and wide distribution of these records will revive interest in and study of the Revolution, and will thus recall to the people, in the most vivid and effective manner, the principles of liberty, independence, union, and popular government for which our fathers fought and which they so well established and the examples of patriotic devotion and heroism with which that struggle was replete.

Your memorialists believe that such publication will prove of incalculable public benefit, and is especially needed at this time, when hosts of people of foreign tongues and ideas are crowding upon our shores and the engrossing cares and distractions of modern life, civilization, and pursuit of wealth absorb the attention of so many of our citizens.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Winslow Warren, president-general; Asa Bird Gardiner, secretary-general; Francis Coffin Martin, New Hampshire; Horatio A. Lamb, Massachusetts; Hazard Stevens, Rhode Island; Morris W. Seymour, Connecticut; Talbot Olyphant, New York; J. W. Campbell, New Jersey; Wm. Macpherson Hornor, Pennsylvania; John P. Wales, Delaware; Oswald Tilghman, Maryland; Wilson G. Lamb, North Carolina; James Emmons, South Carolina; Walter G. Charlton, Georgia; Myers Lamb Meredith, Virginia.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the improvement and maintenance of the Little Kanawha River up to Burning Spring, W. Va., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADLEY submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the completion of the improvement of the Ohio River to $1,500,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,875 to pay JOHN H. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, for services on the Inland Waterways Commission, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment relative to the expenditure of the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Mobile, Ala., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted an amendment relative to the enrollment and allotment of all persons intermarried in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

STATUE OF FRANCIS H. PIERPONT.

Mr. SCOTT. I submit a concurrent resolution, and ask that it lie on the table subject to call.

The concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 24) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 24.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of Francis H. Pierpont, presented by the State of West Virginia to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for the purity of his life and his distinguished services to the State and Nation.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of West Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 197), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate resolution 197.

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of West Virginia of the statue of Francis H. Pierpont, erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, April 2, 1910, after the conclusion of the regular morning business.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I ask that the agricultural appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair lays before the Senate the agricultural appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18162) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, at the bottom of page 25, under "Forest Service."

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to give way for a few minutes to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who wishes to address the Senate.

WATER-POWER SITES.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read Senate resolution 195.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

Senate resolution 195.

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a committee to consist of five Senators, whose duty it shall be to consider the question of the improvement of the navigable rivers of the United States with a view of recommending necessary legislation for the preservation of water-power sites and the coordination of navigation and power where available power sites exist on navigable rivers, and report the result of such investigation, with their recommendations, to the Senate by bill or otherwise. The committee shall have power to employ a stenographer at not exceeding $6 per day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, presidential messages and executive orders have called attention to and dealt with the importance of conserving our natural resources. Conventions and Congresses have from time to time considered it, and a vast amount of information collected and published relating to the subject.

As one of the correlated subjects, it is my purpose to consider and discuss briefly some of the questions involved in the production and development of water power, especially in connection with the improvement by the Government of the navigation of our rivers. The method heretofore pursued has destroyed the possibility of such power, which, if properly preserved, would have been an important and valuable factor in our commercial life, and I desire to suggest some plans for conserving in the future this rapidly increasing valuable asset belonging to the people.

The people of various civilized countries have awakened within the last few years to a partial realization of the place which hydraulic property is to occupy in the political and economic life of this and future generations. The awakening has been sudden, due primarily, it would seem, to three late developments of quite different orders:

First. The perfection of electrical generation and transmission for long distances and the growing importance of electrical power, which has placed it nearly, if not quite entirely, within the bounds of natural want.

Second. It has suddenly dawned upon man's intelligence, due to the present intense energy of modern industrial life, that serious inroads are being made upon various kinds of natural resources, for whose exhaustion the development of water power will prove a partial substitute.

Third. The apparent necessity for restriction, guidance, or control of great aggregations of capital engaged in supplying the wants of the community.

The dangers that menace a proper attitude toward and a wise point of view regarding legislation with reference to water powers must come from three sources: First, in not appreciating the present limitations on the commercial practicability of water-power development; second, in trying to frame water-power legislation so as to conform to constitutional provisions, devised to cover quite different times and conditions, thereby hampering or preventing the accomplishment of one of the greatest benefits to society; third, knowledge of the vital principles, commercially and technically, of problems involved in projecting and carrying out water-power enterprises by private capital—the application of natural means with a minimum of government interference by which the community can be served, without leaving it under monopolistic control, holding the consumer at the mercy of extravagant rates for services which he imperatively must have.

The provisions of the Constitution, which confer jurisdiction and control in navigable rivers, create a partnership in which the National Government and the States are stockholders, and Congress and the state legislatures are the board of directors whose business it is to manage the affairs of the partnership.

The difficulty arises from the fact that the majority stockholder—the National Government—is ignoring and attempting to acquire the holdings of the minority, who are the States, without their consent, and to compel them to pay all the expenses of administering the affairs of the partnership without recognizing their interests in any degree whatever.

From whence does the Government derive its control over navigable rivers? It must be from that provision in the Constitution which gives the Congress the right to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and what was the purpose of this grant? That Congress might regulate commerce between the States, preserve the navigation of the rivers, and render navigable these rivers, where obstructions exist. When the ends of navigation and commerce have been guaranteed, and when the free use of the waters of the river for navigation is secured to all the people of the States, its interest in the river and its duty to the people and to commerce have been discharged. Every other right and interest in the waters of the navigable rivers belong to the State and the riparian owners. The framers of the Constitution never intended that the Federal Government should have any interest in the water of navigable rivers, except for the purposes of commerce, and the States so understood when the Constitution was ratified.

If the Government held absolute control and ownership in the waters of navigable rivers, it is easy to see how one of the richest assets of a State—the water power—might be absolutely destroyed and the property of the citizen virtually confiscated. My contention is that the Government has no interest in the water of navigable rivers except alone for the purposes of navigation, and that this interest does not extend to surplus water. The decisions of the Supreme Court are numerous and unbroken in support of this contention. One of the leading cases defining the ownership and control of waters in navigable rivers was on an appeal from a decision rendered by the supreme court of Alabama in the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212; 15 U. S., 391), in which it says:

> And we now enter into its examination with a just sense of its great importance to all the States of the Union, and particularly the new ones. Although this is the first time we have been called upon to draw the line that separates the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the Government of the Union and the state governments over the subject in controversy, many of the principles which enter into and form the elements of the question have been settled by previous well-considered decisions of this court, to which we shall have occasion to refer in the course of this investigation.

The court concludes in this language:

> By the preceding course of reasoning we have arrived at these general conclusions: First, the shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States respectively. Secondly, the new States have the same rights of sovereignty and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States.

It will be remembered that Alabama was, at the time of this decision, one of the new States, and the court was very careful to put it on the same footing with the old original States.

> Thirdly, the right of the United States to public lands and the power of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the sale and disposition thereof conferred no power to grant to the plaintiffs the land in controversy in this case. The judgment of the supreme court of Alabama is therefore affirmed.

Justice Catron in a dissenting opinion said:

> I have expressed these views, in addition to those formerly given, because this is deemed one of the most important controversies ever brought before this court on any title, either as it respects the amount of property involved or the principles upon which the present judgment proceeds.

Mr. President, it would seem that the Government of the United States has as much right to claim toll from our coal mines as from our water power.

The court in delivering the opinion in the case of Huse v. Glover (119 U. S., 548–549) says:

> How the highway of a State, whether on land or by water, shall be best improved for the public good is a matter for state determination, subject always to the right of Congress to interpose in the cases mentioned.

The exception to this rule is when the State's action is deemed to encroach upon the navigation of the rivers as a means of interstate and foreign commerce. In such cases Congress may interfere and control or supersede the action of the State.

Mr. President, it is easy to understand the effect if any other course of reasoning were pursued. In the case of Veazie v. Wyman (14 How., 568; 20 U. S., 345) the court said:

> Such a pretension would effectually prevent or paralyze every effort of internal improvement by the several States, for it can not be supposed that the States would exhaust their capital and their credit in the construction of turnpikes, canals, and railroads, the remuneration derivable from which and all control over which might be immediately wrested from them, because such public works would be facilities for a commerce which, whilst availing itself of those facilities, was unquestionably internal, although intermediately or ultimately it might become foreign.

The courts have held in a number of cases that bridges over navigable rivers, which are entirely within the limits of the States, are not subject to the control of Congress, but are entirely under the control and subject to the state laws unless the navigability of the river is interfered with. It is not clear that the Government can enter a State and improve a navigable river wholly within the limits of the State without the consent of the State.

Mr. President, I have quoted these decisions to show that the General Government has no ownership in the water that flows over navigable rivers, except for the purposes of navigation and interstate commerce. If the ownership and control of waters not necessary to navigation is in the State and the riparian owners, the question is, By what process can the minority stockholders in the partnership, created by the Constitution, exercise their right and enjoy the use of their property and receive the benefit derived from such use and control?

In the case of the Illinois Central Railroad Company v. Illinois, and reported in One hundred and forty-sixth United States, 459, the court says:

> The soil under navigable waters being held by the people of the State in trust for the common use and a portion of their inherent sovereignty, any act of legislation concerning their use affects the public welfare. It is therefore appropriately within the exercise of the police powers of the State.

The Supreme Court, in the Pollard case, said:

> Then to Alabama belong the navigable waters and soils under them in controversy in this case, subject to the right surrendered by the Constitution to the United States, and no compact that might be made between her and the United States could diminish or enlarge these rights.

Again, in the Pollard case, the court says:

> The right of eminent domain over the shores and soil under navigable waters for all municipal purposes belongs exclusively to the States within their respective territorial jurisdictions, and they, and they alone, have the constitutional power to exercise it.

In Huse v. Glover (119 U. S., 548–549) the court said:

> The State is interested in the domestic as well as in the interstate and foreign commerce conducted on the Illinois River, and to increase its facilities, and thus augment its growth, it has full power. It is only when in the judgment of Congress its action is deemed to encroach upon the navigation of the river as a means of interstate and foreign commerce that that body (Congress) may interfere and control or supersede it.

The principles for which I contend are well stated in the speech of Hon. Henry M. Teller, Senator from Colorado, in the United States Senate, March 31, 1908. Senator Teller traces historically the source of federal jurisdiction and control, refers to numerous decisions on the question at issue, and concludes that the National Government has not the slightest interest in the waters of streams, not even in the navigable waters, and that in the case of lands and where riparian rights are possessed by the Government it holds only as proprietor, with no privileges or exemptions different from the private holder under the laws of the State. It is the logical development of the theory of "delegated, limited, and enumerated powers." It declares the absolutism, in every respect, to the control, ownership, and use in any and all privileges, save the right of the National Government to guard navigation. Even the right of the Government to exercise this single privilege is questioned where the preservation of navigation is inconsistent with and less important than the application of the stream to agricultural and industrial purposes.

Mr. President, I think I have shown conclusively that Congress has no control of the waters of navigable rivers, except for the purposes of interstate and foreign commerce, and that the State controls and is entitled to the unrestricted use of the waters for all other purposes. The question is, How can the General Government enjoy the privileges conferred by the Constitution and the State receive the benefits reserved to it? The purpose of my resolution is to solve this controversy justly and equitably between the interests concerned—the Government on the one hand and the State on the other.

The water power of our navigable rivers is the equal of the State's richest assets, more valuable in time as a heat, light, and power producer than our coal mines, and it is entirely practicable to use this great wealth and comfort producer in connection with our improved navigation. Must we go on indefinitely appropriating large sums of the public money to provide navigation, and at the same time and with the same money forever destroy the power possibilities which in the end are far more valuable in many instances than the navigation provided for? Economy in producing heat, light, and power will very soon compel the use of water power, an energizing force which we are making impossible by our present method of improving navigable rivers. We are spending millions of dollars in improving the rivers of this country that will be a total loss when we come to provide power, or else we have destroyed for all time the possibility of power. A very distinguished army engineer stated to me a few days ago that our present plan of improving our rivers where favorable water stations exist is a crime that can not longer be condoned. A concrete illustration of the unwisdom of the present policy is to be found at Colbert Shoals on the Tennessee River. A lateral canal is now being completed, 7 miles in length, at a cost of approximately $4,000,000.

One great dam costing less money would have provided for better navigation, at which 25,000 horsepower could have been provided. The possibility of power at these shoals is gone, until in the near future conditions compel the construction of a power plant at this point, in which case the canal will be overflowed and its cost a complete loss to the Government. Conditions more deplorable are to be seen at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, just above Florence and Sheffield, more deplorable because of the magnitude of the crime. There a narrow, tortuous canal, 14 miles in length, utterly inadequate to commercial requirements, has been constructed at a cost of nearly $5,000,000, and the army engineer's estimate to complete the project from the railroad bridge at Florence to the head of the shoals will require $5,000,000 more, and when all this large sum is expended we will have difficult and indifferent navigation because of the physical conditions and the great number of lockages on the canal. The crime is that we have destroyed there three great power stations, capable of producing 150,000 horsepower. Like Colbert Shoals, the time will soon come when transportation and production will compel the abandonment of this canal and the erection of these three great dams, so constructed as to give adequate navigation on that great river, one of the principal tributaries of the Mississippi, and at the same time and with the same water produce 150,000 electrical horsepower. We are burning our candle at both ends—consuming our coal to produce power while available water runs idly on to the sea. If this is not a criminal waste of our natural resources, what would you call it?

Mr. President, we are just entering upon the improvement of the Coosa River for the purposes of navigation. Hydraulic engineers declare that the Coosa River in Alabama has the greatest power possibilities of any single river in the United States. The power possibility is estimated at above 300,000 horsepower. Will we go on as we have been going and destroy this great natural resource—the water power, the richest asset the State of Alabama has—or will we provide for navigation and water power jointly, and thus conserve our resources? If we are to conserve the natural resources of the country, Congress must devise the plans. Some just, equitable, and practicable legislation must be enacted.

There is a great misunderstanding about the amount of power that may be produced at dams constructed with a view to navigation alone. I do not believe there is a dam or lock on any river in the United States where a single commercial horsepower can be produced and adequate navigation maintained. Water power to be commercially valuable must be constant, and must be available every day and every hour of the day. No business man would contract for water power if he were not sure of a constant supply, and the supply can not be constant if the navigation of the river is the controlling factor. Suppose the Government were to undertake to improve the Coosa River over a stretch of 3 miles, where there is a slope of 36 feet, and the engineers should provide three locks of 12 feet lift each, and the depth of the water over the miter sill is 6 feet. Does anyone think that a single reliable horsepower could be produced at any one of these dams? There are numerous well-understood reasons why it could not. For the purposes of this explanation we will number these Dams 1, 2, and 3.

The dams are 12 feet high. No. 1 pools the water up to Dam 2, 6 feet over the sill; No. 2 likewise pools up to No. 3, 6 feet over the sill—6 feet being the standard depth of the river. The water at a minimum flow would just run over the crest of the dam at Lock 1, and all power to be valuable must be estimated at the minimum, and not the maximum, flow of the river. Suppose you construct a plant at Dam 1, bearing in mind that there is no storage except such as navigation requires. In two hours after the wheels began to turn the water would be drawn below the 6-foot gauge, thus interfering with navigation, when the Government would order the water-power plant to suspend.

Let us suppose that instead of three 12-foot dams, which cost $500,000 each, the Government should build one 36-foot dam at a cost of $1,500,000, how would the account stand? One lock and dam to keep and maintain instead of three; a broad, long pool, in which any number of barges might be stored when the tow is broken to pass through the lock. By the construction of a 36-foot dam, the Government has amply provided for navigation. Here the State should come in and say, "Navigation has been provided, and you have no further interest, except to see that navigation is not interfered with, and all the water not necessary for that purpose belongs to the State. We desire to use it in adding to our wealth and prosperity." Suppose, for further illustration, it is decided that the dam is not sufficiently high to insure the best results. Why not permit the State, at its own cost, to add 20 or 30 feet to the height of the dam, and thereby secure surplus water in the production of power to be used for services that could be used by the transmission lines?

The additional height of the dam would, doubtless, correspondingly benefit navigation and avoid the necessity for Dam 4 above. If it should appear that the 36-foot dam, constructed entirely by the Government, is a good power site without any additional height, then a company chartered and authorized by the State should pay to the Government out of the earnings of the company a reasonable annual interest on the cost of the dam.

If the Government exercises its right to take over the plant, it may be done by putting it up for competitive sale. The original power company may enter into this competition, and shall be allowed the contract if it becomes the highest reliable bidder. At the end of fifty years the Government should have the right to fix the price at which the power may be sold. If this policy were pursued the Government and the States could keep their hands on the power companies and thus prevent consolidation and monopoly.

Mr. President, the General Government has the same legal or moral right to send a corps of army engineers into the State of Alabama and set fire to her coal mines and stand guard over them while they burn as to send its engineers there and plan an improvement of the navigable rivers to the utter destruction of the water power in that State. The water, other than for the necessity of navigation, is as much the property of the State as the coal mines are the property of the citizens who own and operate them. The water power on the rivers of Alabama is as valuable as the coal mines, and Alabama can not consent to have this valuable asset destroyed. It is one of her greatest wealth producers. To conserve her water power means the conservation of her other natural resources; every horsepower produced by water takes the place of power produced by coal or wood, and consequently these rapidly disappearing essential elements of power are conserved and saved. Their place is supplied by an indestructible agency. Coal or wood consumed in producing power can never be used for any other purpose. It goes up in smoke and disappears, but water is not consumed. It reproduces its energizing force at every power station through which it passes, and when there exists no other opportunity to produce power it runs on to the sea, bearing the commerce that its own power has produced. If the power on these two rivers—the Tennessee and the Coosa—were utilized, it would vastly improve the navigability of these streams and produce untold millions of wealth in the nature of manufactured products and increase the tax values of the State many millions. I can not believe that Congress is so impotent as not to be able to solve this economic problem in a way that will perfectly protect every right of navigation and enable the people of the several States to exercise the rights granted by the Constitution and enjoy the blessings of increased wealth that would inevitably follow.

The beneficial results to follow the application of water power in the generation of electricity for commercial purposes are apparent. Transmission lines could carry the force with which to supply lighting plants, street and interurban railway systems, and manufacturing plants for more than a hundred miles from the point of production, affording opportunity for development at many points where power can not be produced except by steam and at greater expense. It would be the means of locating many industrial enterprises which are barred now because of the cost of producing power. The application of electric furnaces to the production of steel and metallic compounds has already attained a wonderful development, almost wholly unknown to the average man. In all manufacturing concerns a most important factor and element of cost of production is that of power. The water-power stations capable of development, affording a cheaper, constant, and unlimited power for commercial purposes in the United States should be conserved. They mean the erection of manufacturing establishments, the development of resources, the employment of labor, and supplying the wants and necessities of a rapidly growing commercial Nation.

The history of large water-power undertakings is that they have encouraged and made possible new kinds of enterprises which without cheap power would never have been commercially practicable.

It may be anticipated, with a fair degree of assurance, that future great water-power developments will foster and make possible manufacturing enterprises in regions occupied by these powers that would never otherwise have come into them.

In addition to supplying this character of power, they will have a direct and beneficial result on the agricultural industry of our country. The use of commercial fertilizers in the nine cotton States has increased from 1,712,736 tons in 1901–2 to 2,786,430 tons in 1907–8. Constant cultivation in cotton exhausts our lands, which require the use of fertilizers. The same is true of the grain fields of the West, if the yield is kept up with the increased demand. Nitrogen is one of the chief component parts of a high-grade fertilizer. Our supply of nitrates is almost entirely imported from Chile, and at an expensive price. The higher grades are almost exhausted, and we are compelled to use the lower grades at the same price, because we must have it in increasing quantities or find a substitute at home.

A process has been evolved by which high grades of nitrogen may be extracted from the air above and around us, and the supply, of course, is inexhaustible. The difficulty in its production is the cost of steam power, power being the chief element of cost in producing nitrogen from the atmosphere. The great water-power stations on the Tennessee and Coosa rivers in Alabama and in other Southern States, whose source is in the Appalachian Range, can produce nitrogen sufficient to supply the entire demand in this country, at a cost not to exceed one-half of the present price, if we continue to rely upon a foreign supply for one of the chief ingredients.

The exhaustion of soil in the United States has increased with great rapidity in recent years, and this has resulted in the establishment of great fertilizer companies, there being invested in factories in the United States for this purpose alone about $70,000,000, and yet the fertilizer industry is said to be only in its infancy. The world's chief supply of nitrogen comes from the Chilean Desert, from which in one recent year $75,000,000 worth of nitrate were imported, practically 80 per cent of which was used in the United States in fertilizers. Will we continue indifferent to this great waste, and in many instances the destruction of our richest and most valuable resource? We must act promptly. The waste goes on year by year, while we gravely debate the subject. The great Coosa and Tennessee rivers can be improved to a degree of efficiency as to navigation and commerce without ultimately costing the Government a cent, and this can be done without any violation of the Constitution, and secure to the States their general rights in the same way the Pacific railroads were built, and in the same way that President Taft recommends in his late message the carrying on of irrigation in the West by the issuance of bonds or scrip, principal and interest to be returned from the proceeds of lands irrigated.

Water-power development is essentially included in the term "manufacturing propositions." It seeks customers requiring large volumes of power, and as a natural consequence serves those who require cheap power. Such enterprises are growing to be largely electro-chemical, such as the manufacture of aluminum, caustic acids, bleach, calcium carbide, cyanamid, and in many cases wood-pulp mills have been supported by water powers. All enterprises requiring large amounts of power, such as cotton mills, electric railway systems, and various others, find their location where power is obtained from water-power development a considerable advantage over those not so fortunately situated, and since by transmission lines the power may be carried as much as 150 miles, and even more, the advantages are not entirely local.

Within recent years the manufacture of aluminum has become an important and valuable industry owing to the increased demand. It is a metal of great value in the arts, and within a recent period has been very much in demand by the manufacturer of automobiles. It is said the development of water power will afford the facilities for its production in large quantities and cheaper than its present cost. Already parties are interesting themselves in projects for making aluminum in Alabama with a view of utilizing force supplied by water power. Deposits of bauxite, used for the making of aluminum in the United States, are found only in commercial quantities in Arkansas and Alabama. This ore is carried great distances to cheap water power, the principal points being Niagara Falls and on the St. Lawrence River. It is claimed that by its proximity to this raw material, the development of water power in either of these States would enable the manufacturer to produce aluminum, as well as the ware and the utensils made from it, at less than one-third of the average price for the past five years.

Heretofore the effort of the Government has been characterized as devoted to obstructing rather than encouraging the development of water power. This does not come from a conscious purpose to obstruct development, but rather from the difficulty of promulgating a definite policy for power development which would be just in its application, and also from the fact that our Government also has not a recognized department or bureau constituting a place of reference for gaining information and advice or machinery for collecting data and pushing laws that should be passed with reference to power matters. It would then seem that a government bureau was a paramount requirement in connection with a general law for the control of hydro-electric power enterprises.

Such a bureau should have a person in touch with commercial and economic questions, and capable of measuring their practicable application, benefits, and dangers. It should be strong technically, particularly from the standpoint of engineering experience in water powers, construction, and administration. With such governmental machinery, it is possible that private interests may be encouraged to the rapid development of water power now going to waste under conditions which, while proving a great public benefit, would not subject the people to harsh conditions and immoderate prices. In short, it is conceivable that, treated as a broad problem and for its own sake, private capital may be encouraged to the rapid and large development of powers under such conditions as will give to those interested a fair return and to society all of the remaining benefits to their largest degree.

Mr. President, I call the attention of our friends on the other side to the fact that the development of water power is an infant industry and needs protection.

Mr. President, if no Senator desires to discuss the resolution, I should like to have it adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I would state that the National Waterways Commission has already taken up this subject, and in a preliminary report, filed in the month of January, recommended that hereafter when any stream shall be surveyed with a view to the development of navigation, if water power exists in that stream, the examination shall also include a plan under which the two might be harmoniously developed. It seems to me that all of the work which would be contemplated in this resolution is included in the scope of the examinations hereafter to be made by that commission. It would seem unnecessary, therefore, to appoint a committee of Senators for that purpose. The commission has the right to call to its assistance men from any department or bureau of the Government.

I think we are under obligations to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] for having emphasized the importance of the development of water power. There is one question that I should like to ask him, however. Would the Senator from Alabama advise that the improvement of rivers for purposes of navigation—that is, rivers in which there is large water power—be suspended or postponed until a thorough examination can be made with a view to utilizing both the water power and the facilities of the streams for navigation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will unhesitatingly say in answer to the question that on any river where a favorable water-power site exists its improvement for navigation ought not to be undertaken without reference to the power; but I have endeavored to show that there are so many places in our navigable rivers where navigation may be provided and where power can not be provided—commercial power, at least—that to say that the entire improvement of the rivers of the country should be suspended until we can develop a plan by which we are to coordinate the power and navigation, I think, would be going very far.

If the Senator will pardon me, I understand perfectly well the good work that is being done by the National Inland Waterways Commission; I understand perfectly well the ability which has been brought to their aid and all that, but the purpose I have in seeking the adoption of this resolution and the appointment of the committee under it is that we may get to work and undertake at least to formulate a policy, and when we have agreed as to a policy, then to give it the force of legislation, so that the country will know exactly what we are undertaking to do with reference to the natural resources that are so abundant and valuable upon numbers of our rivers.

Mr. BURTON. I would state, Mr. President, my question did not refer to the navigable streams in which there is possible only a slight development of water power, but to such as the Senator instanced, the Tennessee and the Coosa. Would it not be well to postpone the construction of locks and dams which, as he says, may prove useless and may have to be superseded entirely by larger dams in the midst of the stream? The Senator from Alabama will recollect that in 1906 I took the ground that if any adequate navigation was ever developed in the Tennessee, it would have to be by the construction of dams in the open stream. My view at that time was opposed by the argument that it was impossible to improve the open stream; that lateral canals were all that could be constructed. I am really gratified to know that there is a change of opinion in that locality in this regard.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Ohio, Mr. President, is perfectly familiar with the conditions on the Tennessee River, and he will not fail to remember that the lateral canal to which I referred was completed ten or fifteen years ago. That canal was begun by the State of Alabama out of the proceeds of sale of lands which were donated by the General Government to the State for the purpose of constructing that canal. The General Government took it over in 1876, I believe, and since then has pursued the work and practically completed the canal as originally intended.

I am perfectly free to say that, in my opinion, Mr. President, the Government ought not to spend another dollar on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals in prosecution of the plan that now exists on the extension of that lateral canal. I do not believe that the Government ought to go on and destroy effectively and forever by a large outlay of money the great power stations that exist there; and to that end the bill now being considered by the Committee on Commerce has no provision for an extension of that canal and none is being insisted upon. I regard the power possible of development there equal at least to the commerce that will be supplied.

Down at Colbert Shoals I contended for a long time, in connection with a very able engineer, Major Kingman, as the Senator will remember, that that improvement ought to be made by means of a great dam in the open river, to supply the navigation in the open river, instead of a canal, but finally a board of engineers was appointed. They went down there and considered the whole question and reported that a lateral canal was the best means of improvement, and the Government adopted that. I think it was a mistake. That work, however, is completed, and the canal is about ready to be opened. But, Mr. President, the possibility of water power there is gone; they have destroyed it. When the time shall come when we must go back and build a great power station there to meet the demands of the country that are so rapidly growing and increasing, we must necessarily flood that canal and put it out of commission.

That is the situation, and that is the reason, Mr. President, I have introduced this resolution. I understand that the commission is considering the question, but I should like to have a committee of Senators consider it also, if necessary, in connection with that commission. I should like to have that committee formulate a plan, and I should like to have them suggest to the Senate what, in their opinion, is the best means to adopt and the best policy to adopt in order that we may have a definite policy before us and one that we can consistently pursue.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, an implied blame would seem to rest on the commission which made this recommendation for a lateral canal and also upon those who in the State of Alabama constructed the Muscle Shoals Canal. I do not say that the Senator from Alabama has so expressed himself, but the possible implication might be derived from his remarks. I do not think anyone has been to blame, for the reason that the great potentiality of water power was not understood until a few years ago; in fact, I think we hardly yet understand the enormous wealth which belongs to the country from that source. One difficulty, however, remains to be overcome, and it is especially noticeable in the localities to which the Senator from Alabama has referred—the great inequality in the flow at different seasons of the year. As he has said, it is desirable that the amount of water afforded should be uniform at all seasons.

But I do not think it is quite correct to say that that power has been destroyed by the construction of the lateral canal. It is true it may be necessary to abandon the investment made, but the same opportunity now exists as formerly for the construction of dams in the main stream.

The point which I rose to emphasize was whether it is not best to suspend operations in the construction of these dams for the purposes of navigation in that class of streams until we have worked out a well-devised scheme for the utilization of both.

In addition to what I have already said in regard to the duplication of work, I may say that the National Waterways Commission is not anxious either to prevent the creation of any committee or committees which shall duplicate its work nor is it anxious to impose upon itself anything additional; but we have under consideration and shall, no doubt, in a final report cover all the ground included in this resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As to discontinuing the improvement of navigable rivers where possible power sites exist, I have already expressed my opinion. I said that the possibility of power had been destroyed at Colbert Shoals and at Muscle Shoals until the time comes, and it will come, Mr. President, when we must construct these dams for power purposes and navigation, providing much better navigation than the canal itself. When that time comes, I thought I made myself clear, these canals must be flooded, put out of commission, and therefore the cost of these canals and the amount of money expended in their construction would be a total loss to the Government. Of course, I did not mean to say that for all time the power was destroyed, but only until such time as the Government concluded to remedy its mistake by the construction of power dams instead of lateral canals, both for the purpose of navigation and the production of power.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the able speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and I am sure we are all indebted to the Senator for calling our attention to this concrete instance of the importance of uniting the powers of the National Government and of the state governments in the full development of the Coosa and Tennessee rivers. The Senator has called particular attention to the development of power in the promotion of manufacturing and commerce and the immense possibilities of those rivers for that purpose. I have wondered somewhat that the men from the South have not taken up this question in the past with such force and energy as would produce immediate results in legislation. It has been obvious for many years that our plans for the development of our rivers for navigation would be entirely incomplete unless they involved also the study of the uses of the rivers for every other purpose to which civilization can put them, including in the South the development of water power, the preservation of forests, and the drainage of swamp lands.

There is no part of the country that can be so developed and advanced by this movement for the full development of our inland waterways as the South, rich as it is in natural resources, in its forests, in its enormous water power, and in its overflowed lands, which can be reclaimed and made fertile beyond expression.

The Inland Waterways Commission, of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] were members, a commission appointed by President Roosevelt, covered this entire question most satisfactorily in recommendation that our legislation should involve not only the full coordination of all of the scientific services of the Government that have anything to do in relation to water, but also the cooperation of the Nation with the States, each within their jurisdiction and each within their respective powers and rights, in the full development of our waterways. That report has been followed by a report from the National Waterways Commission, of which the Senator from Ohio is the chairman, fully sustaining everything that is contended for in the Inland Waterways Commission report, and going further in the elaboration of the question of the development of transportation on our waterways.

This matter of cooperation has been pending for three years, and yet we have had no action. The Senators and Representatives who live within the region of these various rivers have been urging appropriations for development here and there, but the movement has not yet taken the line of consecutive and connected and joint and cooperative action that is demanded by its importance.

We have the opportunity now, whilst the river and harbor bill is under consideration, to put upon that bill a general amendment which will authorize the President to bring into coordination with the Corps of Engineers of the Army all the various services of the Government that have any duty regarding the study of our waterway resources or their development.

We have numerous services of that kind. We have the Reclamation Service, with its large engineer corps; we have the Coast and Geodetic Survey; we have the Geological Survey; we have the Weather Bureau, all of them making a scientific study of the subjects that relate to water.

Then we have the great Forest Service, which has been engaged in a study of this question with a view to the conservation of water and the maintenance of an equal and stable flow of our streams. We have also the opportunity not only to bring into coordination these various services, so that they can be efficient aids of the Engineer Corps of the Army in this great work of planning the development of our rivers fully and comprehensively for every useful purpose, but we have the opportunity by a general amendment to give the President the power to appoint, in connection with the Corps of Engineers of the Army, a board who can consult with a similar board or commission organized by each of the States, and thus bring the energies of the States and the energies of the Nation into harmony in this great work.

The sentiment of the country is made up on this question. We have had numerous river and harbor congresses. We have had numerous waterways conventions. The sentiment of the country, as expressed in the platforms of the two parties in the last national conventions, indicates that the country is alive to the importance of this question, and demands full, broad, and comprehensive plans that will relate to every use to which a river can be put; and I suggest to the Senator that if he will give his attention to an amendment which I have offered to the existing river and harbor bill, which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD, he will find that that amendment covers this very question.

I am not disposed at all to offer any opposition to the resolution which the Senator offers. I think the more we can enlist in the consideration and agitation of this question the better. The only thing we have to complain of now is the inertia of Congress, and if the Senator's resolution will result in the appointment of five Senators who will give patient and consecutive study to this one question to which his resolution refers, the development of water power, I am sure it will add to the strength of this movement, and the result will be that we will have broad, full, and comprehensive action upon all of these uses to which a river can be put, and comprehensive action that will tie together all the various scientific services of the Government in cooperative action upon this question, and that will tie together all the energies of the States and of the National Government in the full development of scientific plans.

I ask that this amendment be published in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 20686) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, viz: Insert the following:

"The President is authorized to bring into coordination and cooperation with the Corps of Engineers of the Army the other scientific or constructive services of the United States that relate to the study, development, and control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, and to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to uniting such services through a board or boards in investigating questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, forestry, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of transfer facilities and sites, and in forming comprehensive plans for the development of the waterways and water resources of the country for every useful purpose by cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as can be properly undertaken by the United States by virtue of its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and by reason of its proprietary interest in the public domain, and to the States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion as properly belongs to their jurisdiction, rights, and interests, and with a view to properly apportioning costs and benefits, and with a view to so uniting the plans and works of the United States within its jurisdiction, and of the States and municipalities, respectively, within their jurisdictions, and of corporations, communities, and individuals within their respective powers and rights, as to secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States; and he is authorized to appoint as members of such board or boards such engineers, transportation experts, and constructors of eminence as he may deem advisable: Provided, however, That until further authorized by law, the total expenditure under this provision shall not exceed —— dollars."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no pride of opinion, sir, about this resolution. My only purpose is to get it before Congress in order that we may have an expression from Congress that will in a measure be official. We have dallied with this question for years; we have talked about its importance; we have published volumes with reference to it; and still, Mr. President, the talk goes on. I do believe that the time for action has come. I would like to see this resolution adopted. I should like to see a committee of Senators appointed to take into consideration this whole question of the improvement of our navigable rivers with reference to the development of power and the navigability of the river, and present their views here in some form, in the nature of a report or in the nature of a bill covering this question and dealing with it, and providing some means by which we can accomplish our purpose. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18162) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the passed-over items.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, in the item of appropriation for "General expenses, Forest Service," on page 25, line 24, after the word "expenses," to insert "including traveling expenses for legal and fiscal officers while performing Forest Service work," so as to read:

To pay freight, express, telephone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses, including traveling expenses for legal and fiscal officers while performing Forest Service work; and for rent in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "thirty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For fighting forest fires and for other unforeseen emergencies, $135,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 25, before the word "and," to strike out "sixty thousand six hundred" and insert "twenty-one thousand," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase and maintenance of all necessary field, office, and laboratory supplies, instruments, and equipment, $221,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 1, before the word "the," to strike out "Paper tests: To enable" and insert "For enabling," so as to make the clause read:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to test such plants and woods as may require tests to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, $14,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, including rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 20, on page 40.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will ask the clerks to correct the total in lines 19 and 20.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the total will be corrected to conform to the amendments heretofore adopted.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The correct total is $4,672,900.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 41, after line 12, to insert:

That hereafter 35 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1910, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the state or territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated: Provided, That when any forest reserve is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said reserve shall be proportional to its area therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fifty-seven thousand seven" and insert "eight thousand one," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Forest Service, $5,008,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That completes the bill, except two amendments which I desire to offer on behalf of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will present the amendments.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The first one is, after line 2, on page 65, to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 65, it is proposed to insert:

Hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may permit the erection of fences along international boundary lines, but entirely within the territory of the United States, for the purpose of keeping out diseased animals.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Also the following amendment, to appear in a separate paragraph at the end of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of Agriculture, for the fiscal year 1912 and annually thereafter, shall transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury for submission to Congress in the Book of Estimates detailed estimates for all executive officers, clerks, and employees, indicating the salary or compensation of each, necessary to be employed in the various bureaus, offices, and divisions of the Department of Agriculture, in the city of Washington, D. C., and for all executive officers, clerks, and employees of every name and nature required for the Forest Service and other services under said department to be employed outside of the District of Columbia and heretofore paid from lump or general appropriations therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That concludes the consideration of the bill so far as the committee is concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I wish to supplement the remarks I made yesterday by some data that I did not have at hand at that time. I desire that it be in the RECORD.

I have no desire to criticise the existing department having charge of this matter, because, as I said yesterday, it would be inappropriate to anticipate that men were not going to act wisely who are charged with the responsibility of administering the law. But I intend to call attention to some things that may possibly reach further than the Chamber.

Under the administration that we have not enjoyed in the past the forest rangers, who receive $900 a year, have been collecting bounties from the State in addition to their salary. That is, they are employed by the Government of the United States to hunt and kill predatory animals, and they receive $900 a year for doing it. Those men have been charging the State of Idaho, and perhaps other States, I do not know, the amount allowed under the state laws for killing those same animals that they were paid by the Government to kill. I do not believe anyone would undertake to defend them.

In order that there may be no mistake about it, I checked up on the information this morning, and I have it to date.

R. W. Lansing, a forest guard at Emmett, Idaho, receiving a salary of $900 per annum, collected from the State of Idaho $295.50 plus $13.

Mr. GALLINGER. For what service?

Mr. HEYBURN. As scalp bounties. These animals, I have no doubt, were killed upon forest reserves within the State of Idaho. There is a moral obliquity about that kind of thing that it is difficult for a man constituted on ordinary lines to understand.

Then I find also that George Nichols, who is an assistant ranger at Sunfield, Idaho, having a salary of $900 per annum, collected three several sums of the State of Idaho—first $250.50, then $30, and then $20. So he made quite an addition to the salary which the Government pays him for doing this thing and nothing else. These men, according to the statement, are delegated as hunters.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What are the statutes of Idaho in respect to bounties on the scalps of predatory wild beasts?

Mr. HEYBURN. The statutes of Idaho provide that certain bounties shall be paid for the killing of animals whose death is desirable and profitable.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It is a general provision that whoever produces the scalps of these animals shall receive money?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; for the protection of the people of Idaho.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Does the Senator regard it as a very great moral monstrosity that a man receiving $900 a year in Idaho should take scalps to the place designated by law and receive the bounty provided by the statute of Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. I regard it as so obvious and flagrant an invasion of what is right as to be almost impossible to discuss. The Government pays him for doing it. He collects that. Then he goes and collects from the State of Idaho for doing the same thing.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Possibly the government salary has been adjusted on a modest basis with a view of the possibility of his killing a few animals.

Mr. HEYBURN. I anticipated some such suggestion as that, and I have information in regard to the salaries of this class of men. I just took a few samples out of a long list I have here of those who have collected money. We will take James T. Winn. He is a forest guard at Mackay, Idaho, with a salary of $900. He collected from the State of Idaho $195 and $18 for scalps of animals that he had killed in the performance of his duty and pursuant to his employment, and he killed these animals for the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not true that the cattlemen and sheepmen of Idaho have requested the department here, not only once, but many times, for assistance in killing those animals?

Mr. HEYBURN. Perhaps so, Mr. President. The department evidently has employed men at a fair salary and sent them there for the purpose of doing it. It would hardly be contended that the Government of the United States and the State were going into partnership for the purpose of destroying animals, each of them contributing, upon a different basis of computation entirely, for the doing of the same thing. I did not suppose really that there was a Senator in this body or a man in the United States who would defend a thing so obviously in violation of all sense of decency and justice as that of a man drawing two salaries for doing the same thing.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the men who have been designated for this business, as I may call it, are instructed by the department not to undertake to collect these bounties if there is a protest on the part of the State against paying them. It rests entirely with the State as to whether they shall be paid a bounty or not. If Idaho has paid the bounty, the authorities of Idaho have had no objection to paying it, and thought it was for the benefit of the cattlemen and sheepmen of the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I presume the State of Idaho is competent to provide for the extermination of these animals and to pay for them, too. The animals happen to be within the jurisdiction of the United States and on these forest reserves. Those animals were killed upon forest reserves. The State of Idaho derives no benefit from the forest reserves, and it can not be honestly claimed that it does.

Of course I know, probably, what the Senator's mind reverts to, the per cent of what are called "proceeds that is paid," but it is so far outweighed by the loss to the State that it is not entitled to be mentioned.

Mr. President, I called attention to that in order that this RECORD may show it, and that it may be available in the RECORD for all who are concerned. It is in keeping with the morals of the administration of the forest reserves in the past. I do not believe that it will be carried into the future. If it is, I think we will have further inquiry in regard to the proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not yielded the floor. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator if he would have any objection to my placing in the RECORD now a letter from Secretary Wilson upon this very subject, explaining why and to what extent this has been done.

Mr. HEYBURN. Would the Senator mind doing that in his own time?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; I have no objection to waiting, if the Senator prefers.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have some information here, and, as I said, I have taken pains to verify it this morning. I do not know how many pages of items I have such as I have read. However, that is about all I will say concerning those animals.

Mr. President, I do not want Congress to lose sight of the fact that the status of the school lands in Idaho has been established by the supreme court of that State since this question was last before Congress. For a number of years we have contended when the agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration that the forest reserves had included the school sections of the State and rendered them of no value and unavailable for the use of the State. We were met with the statement that the title of those lands had not passed out of the United States, and that they were subject to be included within a forest reserve. Since that question was here before, the supreme court of the State has passed upon it, and I had printed as a Senate document the decision of the supreme court upon that question. It is Senate Document No. 328, and it is the law. It holds that the title passed at the time of the grant; that it was a grant in presenti, so far as the 16's and 36's then existed, free from contract or concern.

Mr. SMOOT. Whether surveyed or unsurveyed?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; surveyed or unsurveyed. The court holds the old familiar doctrine that that which can be made certain is certain in law. That doctrine is about as old as any other legal principle of which I have knowledge. The chief justice of the supreme court has been on that bench now for nearly twenty years. He was extensively engaged in the practice of law in public-land States under public-land conditions before he went on the bench. He is thoroughly familiar with it, and his opinion, which is contained in this Senate document, will convince any lawyer that he knew what he was talking about when he rendered that decision.

Mr. President, there is an iniquity about the exercise of a power merely because you possess it against people who are either so situated that they can not make a defense or are under influences that prevent them from doing it that is startling. They say that if these lands belong to the State they may draw a line around them in connection with some lands that do not belong to the State, and that that gives them the exclusive jurisdiction of everything within that line, whether it belongs to the State or to the Government, and they exercise it. They collect rent for grazing upon the public-school lands of the State of Idaho. There are a million acres of them included within the forest reserves which are withdrawn from every use and purpose to which the State could put them.

The State may only sell its lands at public auction under the provisions of the act creating the State and the constitution of the State. That is not subject to be changed by rule or regulation or by act of Congress or by act of the legislature of the State. It can be changed only by changing the constitution of the State, and that would have to be subjected to the reapproval of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not a fact that the supreme court of Idaho has granted a rehearing in those cases?

Mr. HEYBURN. Fortunately they have disposed of it. This morning I am advised of the disposition, and they emphasized their former conclusions and gave notice as to their manner of enforcing it in case it was doubted.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I think the Senator said a moment ago that there is something in the constitution of his State concerning this land that could not be changed by the people of the State unless with the approval of Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is in the admission act, as well as in the constitution. I will say to the Senator that we are rather peculiarly situated.

Mr. MONEY. I beg pardon; I did not hear the Senator's first remark.

Mr. HEYBURN. I say it is in the admission act, as well as in the constitution. We are peculiarly situated in regard to the constitution of our State. Before Congress acted or considered the question of admitting the Territory as a State the people of the State met and adopted a constitution. They held a constitutional convention, and the people ratified the constitution at an election held for that purpose. When they came here, Congress had full information as to the provisions of the constitution. It contained the provision with reference to the public lands that the State should receive. Congress in enacting the legislation admitting the State recites the fact that the constitution has been adopted, and ratifies and confirms the constitution in express terms, and then, in making the grant of public lands specific, it provides how they shall be disposed of. So we have a double provision, or a double limitation.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator does not hold, however, that whatever provision may be insisted upon by Congress in accepting a State into the Union it binds that State as to any future action regarding its own constitution. Whatever the provision necessary to secure admittance, no subsequent provision that does not bind every other State in the Union is binding upon that State.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the peculiar situation here is that Congress in granting these lands was induced by the limitation upon the disposal of them to make these very liberal terms. The State received these lands under the contract of the act of Congress that they would not be dissipated and wasted. Congress welcomed the opportunity to incorporate this restriction. I do not believe that the State of Idaho, even by an amendment to the constitution, could change the conditions of the contract upon which the Government gave the State the land.

Mr. MONEY. I do no agree with the Senator about that, but it is his own State.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not catch the remark of the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. I say I do not agree with the Senator. He probably knows his own State better than I do. As a general proposition it would not hold good, I think.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not believe that the Senator from Mississippi would contend that the Government, having granted the State lands upon certain conditions, the State by any act could change the condition.

Mr. MONEY. That might be true.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the whole proposition. The State received the lands with that limited power of disposal, and the Supreme Court holds that that grant attached with the admission of the State. If it did, these are the only conditions under which the State can dispose of the lands. And yet the Forest Service come in and by rules and regulations say, "We will nullify the provisions of your constitution, and we will nullify the provisions of the act of Congress; we will inclose this land, a million acres of land—school lands—within a forest reserve or a series of forest reserves, and we will say that you shall not exercise the rights over those lands that were granted you at the time of the admission of the State into the Union." That is what they say in effect. They not only say that, but they say, "We will take the lands and we will divert them to an entirely different use, without your consent, and we will give you just such proportion of the proceeds that we may make out of your lands as we see fit." That is the status of it.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator desire to interrupt me?

Mr. SMOOT. I was only going to say that the Forest Service has never at any time said that they had absolute control over the school sections, and my belief is that the State of Idaho to-day, in receiving $50,000 and a little more last year from the use of school lands within the forest reserves, received a great deal more money than if they had not been there and administered by the Forest Service.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senator is so far wrong that it would seem to be a waste of time to go into the question as to how much a million acres of land would produce in the State of Idaho if administered in the ordinary way.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I take it for granted that more than half of those school lands have not been surveyed. The Government could not touch the timber upon them. Perhaps if the Senator would say that they could sell that timber, of course the State would receive more than $50,000 a year.

Mr. HEYBURN. But our constitution and our organic law provide that the State may sell the timber separately, and you can not repeal it in this body.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true; I do not deny that that is a fact. I simply want to call attention to the fact that the Government has never taken off a stick of timber.

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, yes; they have. That is where the Senator is lacking in information.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I know the facts. The Government is cutting, and has been cutting, and is now asking for bids for lumber cut upon school sections.

Mr. SMOOT. Last year I asked the Forestry Division if they were selling lumber in the State of Idaho upon surveyed school sections, and their reply was no.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose the question of the Senator from Utah relates only to surveyed sections.

Mr. SMOOT. Entirely to surveyed sections.

Mr. BORAH. I understand, however, that the Forestry Bureau still claim that as to unsurveyed sections they had the power to incorporate them in reserves, and that the Government now holds title to them.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think they ever claimed to hold title to them. They do claim that until they are surveyed the title has not passed to the State of Idaho; but as soon as they are surveyed, or when they will be surveyed, the title passes to the State.

Mr. BORAH. The title must rest somewhere.

Mr. SMOOT. The title in unsurveyed lands rests in the Government.

Mr. BORAH. It is the contention of the bureau that the Government still holds absolute title to the unsurveyed lands.

Mr. SMOOT. Until surveyed. But I want to say that the Government has given to the State of Idaho the 25 per cent of all receipts from those lands, whether they are surveyed or unsurveyed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that sounds like a chapter from Dick Turpin. He used to hold up the people on the highways of England, and if anybody complained that he did not have money enough to get breakfast he would hand him back some of the money he had taken from him. I have heard of it being done in other sections of the country. Argument of that kind, urged against the question of absolute title and right based upon law, is in exact keeping with the kind of administration we have had in the forest department for the last number of years. The law cuts no figure. It accomplished nothing to say to them, I own this piece of land. In their judgment it was all subject to their control, and the fact that you claimed ownership to it under recognized law was no basis, in their judgment, for determining your right.

These school sections are subject only to the control of the State under the laws that are made by the legislature of the State of Idaho, and the legislation affecting these lands can not be participated in by Congress. You might just as well get it out of the heads of this department and all others that from this time on Idaho will administer her own government respecting her own lands, because they had been advised to take possession of them, and if a forest officer attempts to disturb them they invoke the state constabulary or whatever force is necessary to throw them off of it.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. How would you find them, how would you locate them, if the land had not been surveyed?

Mr. HEYBURN. They can all be located. The Senator is too good a lawyer to deny the proposition that that which can be made certain is certain in law, and he knows enough of the system of public surveys to know that you can find out where any piece of public land is on the lands of a State by extending the line from the base meridian or any other established survey.

Mr. BURKETT. I am very much obliged to the Senator for the compliment. After what was said by another Senator the other day, I am glad to have the compliment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator is entitled to some compliment.

Mr. BURKETT. But I am frank to say to the Senator that I do not understand how the State of Idaho or how anybody can locate a piece of land on unsurveyed territory.

Mr. HEYBURN. You do not have to locate it. God located it there before the flood. You can own a thing without being able to go out and point it out.

Mr. BURKETT. But the Senator would not contend that because the State had a section of land scattered throughout this domain it could go out and take charge of 640 acres indiscriminately anywhere?

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not have to take charge of it. The Senator's possession there is just as much his as it is here at his home, where he is personally. They do not have to take charge of it. Land is a thing that rests always in the same place. It never moves.

Mr. BURKETT. That may be very true, but until it is surveyed I am at a loss to understand how you can find the place. That is what has disturbed me all the way through. These sections are scattered here and there and nobody can tell exactly where they are. They are at the same place to be sure, and will be there when surveyed, but until the land is surveyed how is the State going to tell when the forester has got on their land so as to get an eviction of the forester or bring any action, or any process, or any other movement that the Senator contemplates by the state constabulary. How are you going to get at the particular piece of land. All this leads up to the question whether the Forestry Bureau have not on the whole disposed of this land in about as practical a way as you can handle this matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. It has disposed of some one else's property.

Mr. BURKETT. Until that land is surveyed the State has not actual possession of it. They do not know where it is. They can not get on particular sections. There can not be a particular section. They may have title to it but they can not tell where it is. How can they handle it? How can they know which sections are theirs? I am at a loss to know how the Senator can claim that the Government has ever sold any timber off a state section when they do not know where the state section is.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator is assuming a great deal in assuming those questions.

Mr. BURKETT. I am only assuming what the Senator said is true.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not mean personal assumption. The Senator is assuming many things as facts which are not. In the first place, the system of surveys of the public land is as definite and as easy of application to the ground on paper as it is on the ground for the purpose of determining where certain things are.

How in the world is this stranger to the title of the State in this land vested with any authority to raise this question? Where does it come in? How does his interest attach to the State's property that he assumes this guardianship and this critical analysis of the State's rights?

Mr. BURKETT. What I am contending is that the Senator's State is not in any better position as far as that is concerned than the Government is. They certainly can not prosecute in a matter of eviction until they can locate their land and get the title established.

Mr. HEYBURN. They assume to prosecute men for an invasion of the State's school sections.

Mr. PURCELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PURCELL. In whom does the title stand to those lands to-day?

Mr. HEYBURN. In the State.

Mr. PURCELL. By what instrument?

Mr. HEYBURN. By virtue of the admission act of Idaho and the constitution of Idaho, which are one and the same.

Mr. PURCELL. What the Senator means is the enabling act and the constitution?

Mr. HEYBURN. We did not have an enabling act. We had an admission act.

Mr. PURCELL. The admission act and the constitution together make a contract by which the State of Idaho claims to own those lands. Is that right?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. PURCELL. Let me ask the Senator, is it not a fact that those two instruments together do not convey title; that it requires something else?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it is not. I know what the Senator has in mind. He has in mind those grants which say there shall be granted to the State, like, perhaps, to his own State.

Mr. PURCELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. The language is, "There shall be granted to the State every sixteen and thirty-six," and so on. That is not a grant in presenti, but is in futuro.

Mr. PURCELL. But is it not true that in addition to those two instruments there must still be a patent and an actual transfer of the land from the Government to the State, and until that is done, is it not a fact that the title to those lands remains in the Government of the United States?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the Senator will find upon an examination of the authorities that the Government never makes any instrument other than Congress furnishes.

Mr. PURCELL. I beg your pardon; all the land grants to railroad companies are followed by patents. Every grant that has been made to any railroad company I ever knew of was followed by a patent, and particularly is that true of unsurveyed lands; lands that are not capable of being designated at the time of the formation of the contract. They follow later on by transfers in the shape of patents, and until those patents are issued it would seem as if the title vests in the Government of the United States; and if it does, the Government certainly has control over those lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from North Dakota has suggested a new doctrine in regard to the title to these lands. It has never been so held. Millions of acres of school lands have passed by virtue of the words "there is hereby granted to the State" so much land. That is the highest title that the sovereign can give. The other would be merely an executive order. The words "there is hereby granted" are words of absolute and complete transfer of title; but the words such as are used in the transfer of public lands or the donation of them in the Senator's State "there shall be granted" are words not in presenti.

Mr. PURCELL. Is it not true that the instrument the Senator speaks of says that "there is hereby granted a body of land," so many acres?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not discussing those lands.

Mr. PURCELL. Very well. Is it not necessary, then, that something else should follow, particularly designating or describing the lands that are sought to be transferred?

Mr. HEYBURN. In that case, yes; but we are not discussing that class of lands now. Those are lands in quantity, and the sixteens and thirty-sixes are a specific grant. The lands in quantity must be selected and the selections approved and recognized, and then they pass by the act of approval. I am not discussing those lands. They are not the lands we are complaining about. The million acres I refer to—made up of sixteens and thirty-sixes—are a direct grant, not in quantity, but specific. That is the difference.

Mr. President, I have attempted to show for the benefit of Senators, and that the RECORD may show, that we have not changed our position. I want the RECORD to show the additional fact that this matter has been decided by the highest court authorized and having jurisdiction to determine it.

Mr. PURCELL. What court is that?

Mr. HEYBURN. The supreme court of Idaho.

Mr. PURCELL. Does the Senator contend that that is the highest court?

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no higher court in the world outside of the court of all courts, and that is the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PURCELL. Is there not a federal question involved in the case; and if there is a federal question involved, then, sir, has not the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction, if they desire to appeal?

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand the Senator is complaining because these parties have not carried it further.

Mr. PURCELL. No, sir; but the Senator says that is the highest court.

Mr. HEYBURN. So it is.

Mr. PURCELL. Does the Senator mean to imply by that that it is the court of last resort, and that the case has gone as far as it could go?

Mr. HEYBURN. The highest court in a State is the highest court in the land, except for appellate purposes, and, if no one appeals, the judgment of the state court is as potent and as far-reaching as that of the Supreme Court.

Mr. PURCELL. That would be true of a county court.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not need to go outside this case, and I have no doubt that the supreme court of Idaho sustained its decision by its citations of authority. On more than one occasion I have noticed rather a look of supercilious doubt when one mentioned the supreme court of Idaho; but if you will examine the records of the supreme court of Idaho, you will find that it is abreast with the supreme court of any State in the United States.

Mr. PURCELL. The Senator surely misunderstood me, if he——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. PURCELL. The Senator misapprehended my remarks if he understood me to say anything derogatory to the supreme court of Idaho. I have great respect for that court; in fact, I have more respect for it in the last six months than I ever had, because, by a divided court, our supreme court adopted one of its decisions which knocked out and overruled and completely annihilated the homestead law of our State.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am gratified to know that the Senator's respect for the court has been enhanced, no matter how. I desire in connection with a discussion of this question to offer as a part of my remarks the decision of the supreme court of Idaho. I can not read it if consent is not given, but it is appropriate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 328, Sixty-first Congress, second session.]

RELINQUISHMENT OF STATE'S RIGHT TO INDEMNITY SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. HEYBURN presented the following opinion of the supreme court of the State of Idaho relative to prohibiting and restraining the state board of land commissioners from relinquishing the State's right and title to certain indemnity school lands.

[In the supreme court of the State of Idaho. November term, 1909. Filed January 22, 1910. I. W. Hart, clerk. William Balderston, plaintiff, v. James H. Brady et al., defendants.]

STATE LANDS—POWER OF STATE LAND BOARD—DISCRETION OF BOARD—TITLE TO SCHOOL LANDS—POWER OF BOARD TO RELINQUISH SCHOOL LANDS.

1. The state board of land commissioners is vested under the constitution (secs. 7 and 8, art. 9) with the "direction, control, and disposition of the public lands of the State under such regulations as may be prescribed by law."

2. Under the provisions of sections 7 and 8 of article 9 of the constitution the direction, control, and disposition of the public lands of the State must be in pursuance and under the direction of the constitution and statutes of the State and not otherwise.

3. Where the proposed or contemplated action of the state land board involves the exercise of judgment and discretion vested in the board, the courts will not attempt to control or direct such discretion, or in any manner interfere with their action, so long as it is exercised within the scope of their authority. Where, on the other hand, the proposed or contemplated action is without the authority of law or has no legal sanction, the courts may interfere and interrupt their action and declare the law on the subject and point out to them the legal scope within which their judgment and discretion is to be exercised.

4. House joint resolution No. 10, adopted March 10, 1909 (1909 Sess. Laws, p. 451), has no force or effect as a law of the State, and can furnish no authority or justification for the state board of land commissioners either acting or refusing to act on any matter coming before them. They can not rest or justify their action in any matter upon the authority or direction of such resolution or any action taken by the commission created by that resolution.

5. The State's title to sections 16 and 36 in every township in the State discussed and considered.

6. The state board of land commissioners has no power or authority conferred upon it, either by the constitution or statute of this State, to relinquish the State's right or title to sections 16 and 36, granted by the General Government for common-school purposes, and any action taken by the board or under its direction or authority attempting to relinquish or waive the State's right to such lands is void.

(Syllabus by the court:) Original action by the plaintiff to procure a writ of prohibition, restraining and prohibiting the state board of land commissioners from relinquishing the State's right and title to certain indemnity school lands. The defendant board demurred to the petition. Demurrer overruled.

Wyman & Wyman and B. S. Crow, for plaintiff.

D. C. McDougall, attorney-general; J. H. Peterson, assistant attorney-general; Edwin Snow and Edwin McBee, for the board. Gray & Knight, amici curiæ.

Ailshie, J.:

This is an original action commenced in this court by the plaintiff, as a citizen and taxpayer, praying for a writ of prohibition against the threatened action of the state board of land commissioners, prohibiting and restraining them from relinquishing the right and title of the State of Idaho to certain lands situated in Shoshone County, and heretofore selected by the board under the land grants made by the General Government to the State of Idaho. The board has filed a demurrer to the complaint, raising the sufficiency of the allegations of the complaint to entitle the plaintiff to the relief demanded. The facts pleaded and on the sufficiency of which we must pass are substantially as follows:

On July 6, 1901, the governor of the State applied to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the survey of a portion of the public domain in Shoshone County and described as townships 44 north of ranges 2 and 3 east, Boise meridian. This application was made under the provisions of the act of Congress of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat. L., pp. 372 and 394). Notice of the application was thereupon published in the Idaho State Tribune, of Wallace, as required by the act of Congress. Official survey was thereafter made by the Government, and its approved plats were filed in the United States land office at Coeur d'Alene on July 5, 1905. It seems that the Commissioner of the Land Office neglected to give notice to the local land office at Coeur d'Alene city of the application made by the State. Between the date of the application made by the governor for the survey and the filing of the approved plats in the land office, a number of settlers went upon the lands and appear to have established their residence thereon.

Under the act of Congress the State was given a priority of sixty days from the filing of the approved plats in the land office in which to select and make filing on any of the lands included in the survey. Accordingly, the state board of land commissioners on July 9, 1905, offered filing lists at the Coeur d'Alene land office for a large portion of the survey, and the applications were refused on the ground that that office had no notice of the preference right of the State and that filings by settlers had previously been accepted. The filings of the State were accordingly rejected by the officers of the local land office. The State of Idaho appealed from the action of the local office to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The commissioner held that the State had a prior and preference right over all settlers who entered upon the lands subsequent to July 6, 1901, the date on which the governor applied for the survey of these townships.

The settlers thereupon appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, and on June 27, 1907, Secretary Garfield rendered a decision affirming the action of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and sustaining the prior right of the State to file upon the lands included in its lists. (See Thorpe et al. v. State of Idaho, 35 L. D., 640.) It appears that soon after the decision of the Secretary of the Interior the state board of land commissioners requested the Secretary to withhold final order and judgment affirming the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and directions to the local land office to receive the filings, and that accordingly the Secretary has withheld the final order and instructions from the department in the premises. This, it appears, however, has been done solely on the request of the defendant board.

In the meanwhile, according to statements made in the briefs by counsel for the board, the matter crept into the political considerations in this State, and it seems that during the campaign preceding the general election of 1908 the two leading political parties made some promises or declarations that, if successful in the election, they would relinquish some of these lands to the settlers who had been unsuccessful in their contests before the department. In obedience, say the briefs, to those promises and representations the legislature, by house joint resolution No. 10, which passed the senate March 2, 1909 (1909, Sess. Laws, p. 451), adopted a resolution appointing a commission consisting of two members of the legislature and the state land commissioner, appointed by the governor, to investigate the claims of these settlers and to take testimony and report the same to the state board of land commissioners, together with their recommendations in the premises. It is also provided that the state board of land commissioners should act upon the unanimous recommendations of the commission. Subdivision 11 of section 8 of the resolution provides as follows:

"Provided, That no recommendation shall be made unless with the approval of all members of the commission: And it is further provided, That the detailed report of the commission, as required in Section III, be filed with the state board of land commissioners within thirty days after the completion of the investigation; and that the state board of land commissioners shall, within thirty days after the filing in their offices of the report and recommendations of the said commission, relinquish or cause to be relinquished all the rights of the State of Idaho to the lands claimed by said claimants or such portion thereof as may be recommended to the favorable action of the state board of land commissioners."

The commission, acting under authority of this resolution, proceeded to the county where the lands are situated and took testimony, and thereafter made their findings and report and filed the same with the state board of land commissioners, recommending that certain tracts of land claimed by various settlers be relinquished and that the State's filing thereon be canceled.

The complaint alleges that the board is about to and threatens to act in conformity with the recommendations of the commission and the provisions of the resolution and relinquish all the right, title, interest, and claim of the State in and to the lands described in the report and recommendations. It is to prevent this threatened action on the part of the board that the present suit is filed.

In support of the demurrer the defendant contends that the board is vested by the constitution (sec. 7, art. 9) with unqualified power and authority over the lands granted by the United States to the State, and is vested with unlimited discretion in the matter of selection of such lands and may likewise, in its discretion, relinquish any such lands. Sections 7 and 8 of article 9 of the constitution provide as follows:

"SEC. 7. The governor, superintendent of public instruction, secretary of state, and attorney-general shall constitute the state board of land commissioners, who shall have the direction, control, and disposition of the public lands of the State, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

"SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the state board of land commissioners to provide for the location, protection, sale, or rental of all the lands heretofore, or which may hereafter be, granted to the State by the General Government, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and in such manner as will secure the maximum possible amount therefor: Provided, That no school lands shall be sold for less than $10 per acre. No law shall ever be passed by the legislature granting any privileges to persons who may have settled upon any such public lands, subsequent to the survey thereof by the General Government, by which the amount to be derived by the sale, or other disposition of such lands, shall be diminished, directly or indirectly. The legislature shall, at the earliest practicable period, provide by law that the general grants of land made by Congress to the State shall be judiciously located and carefully preserved and held in trust, subject to disposal at public auction for the use and benefit of the respective objects for which said grants of land were made, and the legislature shall provide for the sale of said lands from time to time and for the sale of timber on all state lands and for the faithful application of the proceeds thereof in accordance with the terms of said grants: Provided, That not to exceed 25 sections of school lands shall be sold in any one year, and to be sold in subdivisions of not to exceed 160 acres to any one individual, company, or corporation."

Now, there can be no question or doubt but that the "direction, control, and disposition of the public lands of the State" is vested in the state board of land commissioners. It is equally clear and certain that this power must be exercised "under such regulations as may be prescribed by law." Both of the foregoing sections of the constitution contain the same provisions as to this limitation of power. The legislature is prohibited, however, from passing any law that would authorize a sale of school lands for less than $10 per acre, or any sale or disposition other than "at public auction." In many of the matters coming before the board in reference to state lands they must exercise their judgment and discretion, and it is a well-settled principle of law that in such cases the courts will not attempt to control or supervise the discretion vested in the officers of a coordinate branch of the Government. We held to the same effect in Pierson v. State Board of Land Commissioners (14 Idaho, 163). The findings of the board on the facts of any given matter of inquiry is final and conclusive (White v. Whitcomb, 13 Idaho, 490; 29 Sup. Ct. Rep., 599); but an error made in applying the law to the facts, or an erroneous construction of the law by the land department may be reviewed and corrected by the courts. In Pierson v. Board, supra, this court said:

"If they (the board) act in a matter without jurisdiction, there is a remedy; if they misapply the law to the fact found, or in case of fraud, there is a remedy." * * *

It is obvious that if the contemplated action of the board of land commissioners involves the exercise of a judgment or discretion vested in them by law, then this court can not and will not attempt to control that discretion or in any manner interfere with or direct the action of the board. If, on the other hand, the action proposed is without authority of law or has no legal sanction or authority, or is an attempt to act, not upon the discretion and judgment of the board but upon a substituted judgment or discretion or upon the judgment, discretion, and direction of some other board or body, then and in such cases this court may interrupt them and declare the law on the subject, and point out to them the legal scope within which their judgment and discretion must be exercised.

It has been urged in this case, not by counsel for the State, but by associate counsel who are really representing the claimants to this land, that under the authority of Stein v. Morrison (9 Idaho, 426), the writ of prohibition will not lie against the governor or a board of which the governor is a member. The case cited falls far short of going to the length claimed for it by counsel. In that case the court, after stating the respective positions of counsel and the trend of the argument made on this subject, stated its legal conclusion as follows:

"It seems to us that to keep within the principle of our Constitution (sec. 1, art. 2) and form of government, which recognizes the independence and specific character of the 'three distinct departments' of Government, that the judicial department could not attempt to prohibit either of the other departments from acting within the recognized scope of their respective branches of the Government, but that on the other hand the legal effect of such action after it has been taken may be inquired into by the court."

It will be observed that the test enunciated by the foregoing statement is that the action proposed to be taken must be "within the recognized scope of their respective branches of the Government." It is doubtful if anyone would seriously contend that the process of the courts will not run against an individual or individuals, holding an executive office or offices or comprising an executive board, simply because they occupied such official position and were assuming to act as officials although their action was beyond the scope of their authority and wholly unauthorized by law. We do not hold such a position tenable and have never so held.

It is also urged that the writ of prohibition will not run against the chief executive, and that since the governor is a member of the state board of land commissioners the writ will not lie against that board. This position is without merit. As stated in Stein v. Morrison, supra, it is held by many authorities that the writ of prohibition will not lie against the governor of the State to restrain him from performing an executive act. This case does not fall within the line of those authorities nor within the reason on which they rest. The state board of land commissioners is a constitutional body. It is composed of four members, each of whom has a vote on all matters coming before the board. This board is as distinct and separate from all other offices as is the office of governor or judge of this court. It is created by the same instrument which created the office of governor and the judicial department of the State. The individuals who compose the board and discharge its duties happen to be state officers, and it so happens that the governor of the State, by reason of being governor, is chairman of the board. When acting and voting at a meeting of the state board of land commissioners and discharging the particular and special duties devolving upon the board, he is not acting as the chief executive, but, on the contrary, is acting as one of four members of a board in the discharge of certain ministerial and quasi judicial duties imposed on such board by the constitution and statutes. The writ, if issued, would run against the board and not against the governor.

Passing now to a consideration of the action of the legislature, we find that the joint resolution of March 2, 1909, under which this commission was appointed and the report has been made, is not a law of the State. It is not enacted in the manner provided for the enactment of a law (sec. 15, art. 3) and it is not contended that it is a law. On the other hand, it directs that—

"The state board of land commissioners shall, within thirty days after the filing in their offices of the report and recommendations of the said commission, relinquish or cause to be relinquished all the rights of the State of Idaho to the lands claimed by said claimants, or such portion thereof as may be recommended to the favorable action of the state board of land commissioners."

This is not advisory or recommendatory, but is made mandatory. This resolution furnishes no authority of law for the action or direction of the state board, and the board can not act under it or rest any action or judgment or decision made by it upon the resolution. To do so would not be acting on the judgment and discretion of the board, but upon a substituted judgment, namely, that of the commission appointed by the resolution. If this were a legislative enactment in the form of a law, it would still be a serious question if the legislative department of the State could either authorize or direct the land board to part with the State's title and right to school or other lands for less than the constitutional minimum price or without a sale "at public auction."

It is contended that the board might discover that some of the land included in the lists filed is worthless and that they might determine it wise to omit such land from the further lists and take other land instead thereof. That contention may be conceded so far as this case is concerned, and still the admission will not answer the difficulty confronting us in this case. It is alleged by the complaint that the defendant board are threatening and proposing to act upon the report of the commission and in conformity with the resolution passed by the legislature and the investigation and report thereon, and are about to relinquish and surrender up the right and title of the State to this land. That allegation necessarily admitted by the demur takes the question of the discretion and judgment of the board out of the case, and rests the action of the board entirely and solely upon this legislative resolution and the investigation and report had and made thereunder.

The constitution of this State was framed by the constitutional convention eleven months prior to the admission of the State into the Union, and it was ratified by the people some eight months before the admission. Notwithstanding this fact, the people at that early date incorporated into the fundamental law of the State sections 7 and 8 of article 9, heretofore quoted, and thereby forbade the legislature authorizing any sale of land for less than $10 per acre or ever "granting any privileges to persons who may have settled upon any such public lands subsequent to the survey thereof by the General Government, by which the amount to be derived by the sale, or other disposition of such lands, be diminished, directly or indirectly." It was provided that the legislature should enact laws whereby the general grants of lands made by Congress to the State should be "judiciously located and carefully preserved and held in trust" for the several purposes and objects for which they were granted. The admission bill followed the provisions of the constitution, and by sections 8 and 11 thereof it is provided that none of the lands granted by Congress to the State should ever be sold for less than $10 per acre. It needs only to be called to mind to be at once apparent that the legislature can not authorize the land board or anyone else to do any act with reference to state lands that is forbidden by the constitution. Any gift of school or other state lands or relinquishment of the State's title is in violation of the fundamental laws of the State and would be void.

Another thing that should not be overlooked in this case is that the board must act "under such regulations as may be prescribed by law." The right of the State to this land has been adjudicated and determined by the Interior Department of the Government after a contest before that department covering a period of about nine years. The State has been pursuing its legal rights, and the issue has been determined by the duly constituted tribunal in favor of the State. No privity of interest existed between the State and these settlers. The State was not acting in its sovereign or governmental capacity, but purely in its proprietary and business capacity, in acquiring title to property. In such capacity it could owe no duty to the citizen or settler, except to keep within its legal rights and refrain from trespassing upon or interrupting any of the like rights of the settler. The Secretary of the Interior, the final arbiter in such matters, has found that the State was well within its rights and that the settlers had no rights in the premises. Now it is proposed to turn the land board, or the commission appointed under this resolution, into a kind of court of equity, and after a nine years' lawsuit and the expenditure of thousands of dollars to attorneys and agents for arguing and urging the State's claim at Washington, to reverse the judgment of the Interior Department and conclude that the State has for nine years been waging an unconscionable demand for a part of the public domain that rightfully belongs to settlers. The land board is not a court of equity; it is an executive board charged with duties that must be executed in conformity with law.

Some such argument as is now made in support of the proposed action of the state land board was evidently made by the attorneys for the settlers before the Secretary of the Interior. The counsel for the State made reference to that fact in their brief, and said:

"There is all through the appellant's (the settlers) brief the assumption of some wrong done the settlers by the State. It is asserted that the grants to the State were 'in derogation of the common rights of the settlers,' 'must be strictly construed,' and that its selections in this case were in some way irregular or unfair. The officers who are representing the State in this matter feel, on the other hand, that in seeking to satisfy the grants for common-school purposes they are in the highest sense endeavoring to acquire this land as a heritage of the whole people. These very settlers who are appellants here will share in the benefits of the State's success." (35 L. D., 640.)

It was only after the subject had entered the domain of politics (as stated by the briefs) and political conventions had made promises and declarations in consideration for votes, that any different view appears to have been taken of this matter than that expressed in the State's brief before the Interior Department. The only thing in the way of carrying out this promise is that it would be a violation of the law. There is no statutory law to prevent political parties making all the promises they see fit to make, but whenever they undertake to carry out those promises by giving away the school lands, the heritage of the children of the State, the law steps in and forbids.

It has been urged on the oral argument in this case that at least a part of this land was selected as indemnity or lieu land instead of sections 16 and 36 in the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation. That question does not directly arise on the consideration of this demur, but since it is incidentally involved in the consideration of another phase of the case and will arise in the final determination of the case, we will give it consideration here. As has been heretofore observed in this opinion, the people of the State had adopted the constitution prior to the passage of the admission act. The act of July 3, 1890, admitting Idaho into the Union, specifically "accepted, ratified, and confirmed" the state constitution, and the State came into the Union immediately upon the passage and approval of the admission bill. Nothing remained for the State to do to bring itself within the provisions of the act of admission. It was then a State.

Sections 4 and 5 of the admission bill provide as follows:

"SEC. 4. That sections Nos. 16 and 36 in every township of said State, and where such sections or any parts thereof have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one quarter section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said State for the support of common schools, such indemnity lands to be selected within said State in such manner as the legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"SEC. 5. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be disposed of only at public sale, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the legislature shall prescribe, be leased for periods of not more than five years, and such lands shall not be subject to preemption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only."

It will be observed that the language of this grant is in præsenti. The grant would therefore seem to be a present grant. The act says that sections "16 and 36 in every township of said State * * * are hereby granted to said State for the support of common schools." It also provides for the selection by the State of "indemnity lands" to reimburse the State "where such sections or any parts thereof have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress." This evidently had reference to the time of the passage of the act and meant that lieu or "indemnity lands" might be selected for such lands as had been sold or disposed of at the time of the admission of the State. This is accentuated by the provisions of the latter part of section 5, saying that no such lands, "whether surveyed or unsurveyed," shall be "subject to preemption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States." This act, it will be observed, is different from most of the previous land laws as well as land grants, in that it specified and included "unsurveyed" lands, and thereby withdrew all the "unsurveyed" sections 16 and 36 from settlement or "entry under the land laws."

Section 13 of the admission bill specifically provided against the contingency which arose in the Nevada admission bill (13 Stat. L., 30) as construed in Heydenfelt v. Daney G. & S. M. Co. (93 U. S., 634). That section provides that all mineral lands shall be exempt from the grants made by the admission bill and authorizes the State to make selections of lieu land for sections 16 and 36 wherever such sections might be lost to the State by reason of being mineral lands. The Nevada admission bill contained no such exemption or reservation. The chief reason, however, given by the court for the decision in the Nevada case does not exist or apply here for the reason that many of the sections numbered 16 and 36 in Idaho had been "sold or otherwise disposed of" prior to the admission of the State. It may be further noted that section 14 of the admission bill negatives the idea of the necessity for a selection of sections 16 and 36, and of the Secretary of the Interior having any control or direction whatever over such sections. His authority and direction is confined by that section to "lands granted in quantity or as indemnity" lands.

It seems to be intimated that the admission bill was in some way amended and modified by act of August 18, 1894, and other amendments to the land laws (28 Stat., 372, 394), but we know of no power or authority whereby the Congress can divest the State of its title to lands that have been previously granted and to which title has vested.

It is not improper to note another significant fact in this connection. On February 22, 1889, which was about a year and a half prior to the admission of Idaho, Congress passed an act (25 Stat. L., 679) authorizing the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and state governments and providing that they might thereafter be admitted as States. That act, by section 10 thereof, provided that the new States should, upon their admission into the Union, receive sections 16 and 36 in every township for common-school purposes. That same section, however, contained a proviso that is nowhere to be found in the Idaho admission bill. That proviso specifically excepts and reserves from the operation of the act sections 16 and 36 "in permanent reservations for national purposes" and "any lands embraced in Indian, military, or any reservations of any character." It is significant that the Idaho admission bill, passed subsequent to the passage of the foregoing act, contained no such exception or reservation. There is nothing in the entire admission bill which negatives the idea of a present grant. The grantee was in existence at the time of the passage of the act and the lands were in the State, some surveyed and others unsurveyed. The fact, however, that the land was not surveyed could make no difference where the numbers of the sections were specifically given.

The title to unsurveyed lands may be as readily conveyed as that to surveyed lands. It is a maxim of law that that is certain which is capable of being made certain. (Id certum est, quad certum reddi potest.) All that remains to be done in order to identify these lands on the ground was to have the survey extended over them. The description in the grant was definite and certain. So far as we are aware it has been the uniform holding of the Supreme Court of the United States that such grants are grants in præsenti, and immediately vest title in the grantee. The principal if not the only exceptions to this rule are Heydenfelt v. Daney G. & S. M. Co., supra; Hall v. Russell (101 U. S., 503); and Rice v. Minn. & N. W. R. R. Co. (66 U. S., 358; 17 L. Ed., 147). The Heydenfelt case, so far as we can find, has never been referred to by the Supreme Court but once (N. Y. Indians v. U. S., 170 U. S., 18) and it was there mentioned as one of the rare exceptions to the general rule in construing land grants. The cases to the contrary are too numerous to attempt to collate them all. (See Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall., 44; Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. U. S., 92 U. S., 733; Mo., K. & T. R. R. Co. v. Kansas P. R. R. Co., 97 U. S., 491; Den. & R. G. Co. v. Alling, 99 U. S., 463; St. P. & R. R. Co. v. N. P. R., 139 U. S., 1; Deseret Salt Co. v. Tarpy, 142 U. S., 241; N. Y. Indians v. U. S., 170 U. S., 1.)

A holding that the State, hampered as it always is in such matters, was intended to run a race with settlers, land-scrip brokers, railroad companies, and timber and stone land grabbers to secure the remnant and refuse of the public domain as lieu and indemnity lands for all its best and most valuable school-land sections, 16 and 36, would render sections 4 and 5 of the admission bill only a delusion and an idle declaration. At the time of the admission of the State into the Union less than one-fifth of the area of the State had been surveyed. There remained about 44,000,000 acres to survey. If title vested in the State to the school sections only that had been surveyed, the State was getting merely the barest contingency for the unsurveyed sections, notwithstanding the declaration in the act that "whether surveyed or unsurveyed," such lands should not be subject to any kind of entry.

This discussion, however, is collateral and incidental only to the main point with which we are here interested. Whether the Government, through any of its agencies, has the power to reclaim the school sections granted by the admission bill is immaterial, so far as the Government is concerned, because Congress, by the act of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 372), and other acts dealing with the public domain has amply authorized the Interior Department to grant indemnity and lieu lands to the States for any and all lands lost or relinquished by the State. (Op. Atty. Gen., Sept. 15, 1909; Decision Secretary Interior in Heirs of Irwin v. Ewing and State of Idaho, filed subsequent to Sept. 15, 1909, and not yet officially reported.) The real question, then, recurs: Has the State authorized the relinquishment of sections 16 and 36, and has the state land board the authority to relinquish the State's right to such lands? But one answer can be given to this query. The authority for such an act can not be found in either the Constitution or statute. It is therefore perfectly safe to say that no such power exists. We have hereinbefore said that the board must act under the law. It must find authority in the Constitution and statute for its acts. No such authority as claimed exists, and it is clear that the state land board has no power to relinquish or surrender the right or title of the State of Idaho to any of its school lands. If the State's title to any of these lands comprising sections 16 and 36 is questioned or denied by the department, then the duty of the State to secure an adjudication of the matter by the Federal Supreme Court is plain and unmistakable.

It follows, therefore, that whatever may be said with reference to the State's vested rights in sections 16 and 36, it is plain that where such sections are found to be mineral lands the State's title fails by reason of such fact, and the land board are authorized, and indeed it is their duty, to make indemnity selections from other lands to reimburse the State for the loss. If the state agent in making the filing should err in describing the lands lost, sold, or disposed of, for which the lieu land selection is being made, we do not apprehend such an error would defeat the State's right to make the selection and acquire the title to such land and have them properly charged against such lands as it had actually lost by reason of the mineral character of school sections or by reason of loss to the State of any of its public grants from any other legal cause.

The complaint states a cause of action and the demur will be overruled. It is well enough to suggest at this time that the action of the commission appointed by the joint resolution of the legislature has no place in the consideration and decision of the land board and can furnish no protection or justification for any action by the board, and no evidence on that subject would be admissible or considered in this case. Neither will evidence as to the condition of these lands or the bona fides of the settlers be considered. Their claim has been one against the United States, and they must wage that claim against the General Government and not against the State. The State has acquired whatever right, title, or claim it now has to the lands freed of any and all claims of the settlers.

Sullivan, C. J., and Stewart, J., concur.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in order that we may know how matters have been going along, I have here something that indicates the wishes of the people in regard to this matter. Here is a petition, with probably two or three hundred names on it, of persons who reside upon one of these forest reserves. You would not suppose that that many people could reside upon a forest reserve; if it were not adapted to any other than forestry purposes, you would hardly expect that they could live there longer than their picnic baskets lasted, and yet we find here two or three hundred people living upon that forest reserve. They filed a petition asking that it may be open to settlement, so that they may have neighbors and community life; that they may build up their towns and have their public institutions, as other places have. I call attention to that merely to show that the people of that country are asking the right to use these lands, which belong to them.

Is the right of a man to the public lands less because he lives in Idaho than it is because he lives east of the Mississippi River? I have heard it stated here frequently that these lands belong to the East as much as to the West, and then an argument would be based upon that statement to the effect that they belonged entirely to the East, and that the man in the West who undertook to exercise his right to them as a co-owner with the people of the East had to prove his right.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator did not say upon what forest reserve the petitioners were located.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought I did. It is the Seven Devils Forest Reserve. It lies in Washington County, in the State of Idaho, very largely.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have here a small book containing petitions from Idaho, some protesting against certain withdrawals from reserves and others asking that additions be made.

Mr. HEYBURN. Where did the Senator get the book?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a copy of certain petitions——

Mr. HEYBURN. Who furnished it?

Mr. SMOOT. I was furnished this by the Forest Service.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought so. Mr. President, I am perfectly well aware that petitions were circulated in Fremont County and in some of the other counties asking for an enlargement of the forest reserves; but when I examined them—they were sent me—I found they were written upon Forest Reserve paper and stationery, and I grew suspicious of them. I found on further inquiry that they emanated from those who were receiving the special favors and blessings of the forest-reserve policy, so that I did not give as much consideration to them as I might otherwise have done. I think I have the originals of those, or duplicates of them.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must also know that when the Secretary of Agriculture was in Idaho public meetings were held there in relation to this very question. The Secretary had a desire to find out what the feelings of the people were, not only in Fremont County, but in nearly every county in Idaho, and even the Weiser National Forest Reserve. I think the minutes of those meetings show there is a sentiment in Idaho for forest reserves.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly, I do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I had the pleasure of meeting the Secretary of Agriculture while he was in the State of Idaho, I think I ought to state, in justification to the integrity of the record here, that the Secretary did not have the opportunity of meeting very many of the people who were interested in this question. He was in the State, I think, a day and a half or perhaps two days. He was at Pocatello, and I think at the town of Mackay. He perhaps met 100 people of the State in those places, but unfortunately the only ones whom the Secretary could meet were those interested in extending the grazing privilege of the forest reserves.

Mr. SMOOT. Why so, Mr. President?

Mr. BORAH. Largely because they were so deeply interested that they got there in time to see him.

Mr. SMOOT. No one else——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not want it to be understood by that that it was the design or purpose of the Secretary of Agriculture to do other than to acquire all the information which he could acquire; but he came into one corner of the State and went out at the same corner, without knowing anything at all concerning three-fourths of the State. His time would not permit him to go farther. It simply demonstrates the fact that it is impossible for the Secretary of Agriculture or anybody else to gain any such information as is necessary to make an intelligent report by visiting one or two counties in a State.

I do not suppose that the Secretary of Agriculture saw a single foot of the forest lands of our State. I do not think he was off the railroad far enough to know where they were located. He went there and met a few of the people whom he could meet on a very rainy, bad day and went away. His time was limited.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I made no statement——

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment, please. I want to express my appreciation of the words uttered by my colleague. I, unfortunately, was away and could not be present, but I have had so many letters fully sustaining the statement made by my colleague that I have no hesitation in vouching for it at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the statement I made was that the Secretary of Agriculture was in the State of Idaho; that meetings were held there which people were asked to attend for the purpose of finding out their sentiment toward the forest reserves. Those meetings were held; notice was given of them; and I simply stated that the minutes show there was a sentiment in Idaho for forest reserves. Mr. President, I have here petitions or copies of them from nearly every part of Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I guess I have the originals.

Mr. SMOOT. While the Senator may have the originals, I know that the copies here certainly indicate that not only the mayors of cities, but the authorities generally in the cities, according to the reports that I have here, are in favor of the maintenance of the forests in Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if my colleague will permit me?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. There is no question as to the fact that there are people in the State of Idaho who are in favor of forest reserves. There are not so very many who are in favor of the manner in which the reserves have been administered, but there are, nevertheless, many people there who would be in favor of forest reserves if those reserves were confined to lands which were peculiarly and only timber lands. The Secretary of Agriculture visited the State of Idaho for the purpose of ascertaining, if he could, how many acres of agricultural land was contained in forest reserves. The homesteader, the man who believes that a large portion of land in the forest reserves is susceptible of farming, did not see the Secretary, nor did the Secretary see the homesteaders. He only saw those—and they are, of course, among our best people—who are interested upon the other side of the question, in increasing the forest reserves, so far as agriculture is concerned, for the purpose of increasing their privilege of pasturage.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is it.

Mr. BORAH. The Secretary himself, as I said before, visited no part of the reserves. He did not see any of them. He was not off the railroad over 300 yards, and he could not know anything except what was reported to him. You could always find a few people in favor of the proposition there, even under the present conditions, but you can not find there a great many who are in favor of keeping thousands and thousands of acres of agricultural land in forest reserves.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator knows that there has been an examination in the past, and also will be in the future, as to what lands should be eliminated from the forest reserves of Idaho. I have here a statement of the number of acres that have already been reported, showing the different forest reserves and the amount of acreage, and up to the present time 476,284 acres have already been recommended to be eliminated from the reserves.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is true. It was once contended upon the floor of this Senate, just as earnestly as it is contended now, that there were no agricultural lands in the forest reserves in Idaho, but they have excluded some 400,000 acres. They can exclude 400,000 more of just as good agricultural land as that which they have excluded; and when we get to the point where we have the agricultural lands thrown open to entry, where men may make their homes and go and build up the country, we will not have so much controversy about the lands which are left.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say, in answer to the Senator, that I do not remember of anyone upon the floor of the Senate ever saying there was no agricultural land within the forest reserves of Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it has been said by way of argument and in discussion many times, and, in addition to that, the fact that they were put in the reserves was presumptively a declaration upon the part of the bureau, that they were not agricultural lands, but were forest lands, because, in the first place, they had no right under the law and no authority to put anything except timber lands in forest reserves.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I want to resume, because I want to conclude very soon.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not only have they created forest reserves and taken possession of them under the guise of forest reserves, but they are creating a new asset and a new name for them, not mentioned in any act of Congress that ever was passed, under which they have taken 601,904 acres to their bosoms. They have not done so because they say that it is necessary for forestry purposes, but they call them "administration sites." Within the forest reserves they have taken 601,904 acres and outside of the forest reserves they have taken 19,974 acres for administration purposes. I have vividly in my mind the picture of two of those "sites." One of them, just before you get to the end of the Pacific and Idaho Northern Railway—Evergreen, I think, is the name of the station—is one of the most beautiful mountain homes that it has been my pleasure to see. The forestry officers took possession of it because a man was not justified, in their judgment, in attempting to make a homestead of it and living on it. It is as fertile as any acre, aye, it is more fertile than any acre within a hundred miles of the city of Washington. It has a climate in which they can raise as great a variety of products as they can raise in this section, and the forestry officers are living there comfortably and peaceably for administration purposes upon this man's homestead.

Then, again, there is another one down very close to the line in Blaine County.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Do I understand the Senator to say that in these cases land was taken outside of forest reserves?

Mr. HEYBURN. They took the one I have referred to in a forest reserve, in order that they might work their scheme. In Blaine County, I believe—in what was old Alturas County—the line is not at all times familiar, and they took possession of a ranch upon which men had lived and raised families for twenty-five years. They said, "Your judgment does not govern us; this land is not fit for a homestead, and no man is justified in living upon it; you are crazy and you will starve to death." The man said, "I am not starving to death. There are my buildings and there are my crops." "Well," they said, "we need it for administrative purposes;" and they got it.

Mr. SHIVELY. And they are living there?

Mr. HEYBURN. They are living there now.

Mr. SHIVELY. Did they have any judicial proceeding to get possession of that property?

Mr. HEYBURN. Not a proceeding of any kind, except——

Mr. SHIVELY. An officer merely came along on horseback and warned them off?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no doubt he rode. Those officers ride a good deal. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHIVELY. Is that the kind of judiciary they have out in that country?

Mr. HEYBURN. But this was in a forest reserve in Idaho. They made it a forest reserve in order to get the jurisdiction.

Mr. SHIVELY. I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know of another case where a man had selected his homestead of 160 acres. He worked in the mines in the county where I live for years, and finally he concluded he was getting along and ought to have a home, and went down into the central part of the State and selected what looked just the ideal kind of a home that he had always longed for. He was from Missouri originally, and he had his own idea of what constituted a comfortable home. He settled down there and went to work. He had been there seven years, and had sent back for some members of his family to come there and share the home with him. The forestry officers went there and said, "You can not make a living on this ground." "But," he said, "I make all the living I need on this ground; it is good enough for me. It is as good as I was accustomed to back where I came from." "Oh, well," they said, "it is not fit for agricultural purposes; we want this." And they took it. I wish you might see the pitiful letters from these people that I have received. I could bring hundreds of them here.

Mr. PURCELL. Was this after the filing had been made, or was the man merely a squatter?

Mr. HEYBURN. He could not file on it. He was waiting for the survey, and we had been knocking at the doors of Congress here to get money enough to survey that land.

Mr. PURCELL. He was a squatter?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but do I exaggerate when I say that half of the land west of the Ohio River was taken up under squatters' rights and before the survey?

Mr. PURCELL. No, sir. Their title is good.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Government has always of necessity recognized the squatter's right. Most men will not take chances on delayed title on unsurveyed land. So they hang back until the lands are surveyed; but there is an element of the real pioneers who go forward, knowing that the country is open to settlement, and relying upon the justice and fairness of the Government at the proper time, and as soon as convenient, to survey the land and provide for title. We have always had those people. They have made this great western country what it is. The daring and the spirit and the energy that prompted a man to take his family in a white-covered schooner and drive across the Plains for weary weeks and perhaps months has instilled into the community of the frontier the spirit that has proven it capable of settling up that country and driving back aboriginal inhabitants, defending their homes day and night, standing on picket duty.

The judgment of these foresters! If you could know who some of these foresters are and the relation that they bear to the powers that be, you would understand more of it; but it would be invidous should I undertake here to name them.

Mr. PURCELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PURCELL. I did not want the Senator from Idaho to get the idea that I was in any way casting any ridicule upon a squatter.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not get that idea.

Mr. PURCELL. I want to say to the Senator that I have had personal experience of the fact that they have done much toward the settling up of his country and my country, and if they have settled upon a piece of government land, my position has always been that they have got the highest title as long as they are in possession of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. That has been the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. When the objection was raised in the case of Osborne against The Washington and Idaho Railroad Company they so expressed themselves.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question, now that he has paused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator from Idaho probably knows what the particular reason for the action in these cases was; I do not, and probably others of us do not. But the forest agents do not go into these countries anywhere and just wantonly and without any particular excuse, without any reason at all, drive a man off a piece of land on which he has settled. They have in a good many instances taken land under the nominal plea that it was for administration purposes when they wanted to protect a water site or something of that kind. There was some reason for their action, and perhaps the Senator knows what the particular reason was. If he does know, I at least should like to be informed of what the particular reason was which they gave in each one of those instances for taking possession of this land. They have not done it wantonly without any reason at all, I judge. They have had some excuse and have not merely driven the homesteader off his land without some good reason.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was a nice place to live; they wanted to live there; the man generally had good buildings, and it saved them considerable trouble. I can not give any better reason than that.

Mr. BURKETT. They did not take possession of those buildings and all that without making compensation, I hope.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not surprised that the Senator is surprised, but they did just the same.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the statements made by my colleague [Mr. HEYBURN] seem to be somewhat of a surprise to some of our eastern friends. Perhaps now they will not be surprised that some of us are not able to accept the administration of the Forestry Bureau as it has come to us, because we contend that almost every law known to men in the protection of the rights of property has been violated time after time in the administration of these reserves. They have combined the judiciary, the legislative, and the administrative. They have combined the prosecutor, the jury, and the judge all in one. It is not that the western people are opposed to forest reserves, nor are they opposed to the policy of conservation; but they are opposed to any policy or to any system that violates the fundamental principles of our form of Government. We know that time after time men have gone within forest reserves in good faith, located their homes, and have expressed their wish and desire there to make a home, and have either, through one system or other, been driven out of the reserve. Excuse! The settler who loses his home never knows what the excuse for driving him away was. All he has is that the judgment of the man who drives him away is that he can not make a home there.

I say, Mr. President, that it is not within the power of the bureau to determine whether a man can make a farm out of a particular piece of land. If the land is agricultural land, the only man who can determine that is the man who is willing to go there and devote his energies to making it a home and expend his effort in an attempt to do so.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and, Mr. President, they claim to exercise the same right with regard to mining claims, to say what is and what is not a valid discovery. No man can know to a certainty in the early stages of a mining claim whether it is going to be a success or a failure. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Chambers against Harrington, reported, if my memory serves me aright, in 115 United States, said that that which the miner was willing to spend his time and money upon in the expectation of finding ore constituted a valid discovery; and it was the best definition that ever was given for what constituted a valid discovery. The responsibility is upon the man who is willing to expend his time and his work with the expectation—not with the certainty, but with the expectation—of finding ore. I had a court once undertake to modify that in instructing a jury, and he inserted the word "reasonable"—"with the reasonable expectation of finding ore;" but the Supreme Court struck out the word "reasonable" and made him try the case over again. Yet, if you will take their Use Book and examine the record of their acts and proceedings, you will find that they are undertaking to determine for the prospector where he shall locate and to determine the wisdom of his act.

I have had handed to me while I am standing here a special dispatch, headed:

SHOT TO DEATH BY UNKNOWN PARTIES—ROBERT BYRNE AMBUSHED AND MURDERED AT NEW CAMP OF JARBIDGE—FEELING HIGH IN CAMP—BYRNE ORDERED FROM GROUND BY FOREST RANGER, BUT REFUSES TO LEAVE.

TWIN FALLS, February 27.

Carriers reached Salmon Dam to-day conveying the remains of Robert Byrne, a popular Twin Falls man, aged 31 years, from Jarbidge Camp, where he was fatally shot last Saturday from ambush, for refusing to vacate ground, from which he had been ordered by Forest Ranger Charles Butler. The latter—had just arrived in Jarbidge with seven prospectors, supposed to be personal friends, and he is said to have advised them to take possession of whatever ground they desired.

He was apportioning out the earth like another of his kin from the top of a mountain, attempting to give them that to which he had no title. This forest ranger takes seven men into a mountain camp and says to them: "Disregard all these fellows; you are here with me; I am the forest ranger; I have my green uniform and the cocked feather in my hat—the insignia of office—and I will protect you." And he does protect them, and he shoots the man off of his own property from ambush to protect the men whom he took in there that he might apportion out to them the land. That has just come to my attention since I have been on my feet.

Mr. President, I will pause long enough to connect that up with the last Congress. The shooting of that man from ambush by the forest ranger is in keeping—only a little more emphatic—with the shooting of the mayor of our city, who was riding along the road in a carriage with his family; because, forsooth, he would not, or did not, turn out of the track with his carriage to the extent that he could avoid touching the stirrup of the forest ranger who was riding along the road. The forest ranger pulled a revolver and commenced shooting at him while in the carriage with his family. He was tried—there is a court record of that—and convicted and sentenced. He was fined, the fine took his horse, and by reason of losing his horse he lost his job as a forest ranger, because the rangers have to furnish their own horses.

These are merely little instances of the manner of administration. I said yesterday that the only thing we do base our hope on under the new régime is better administration. I am willing to leave the laws practically as they are, in the hope that this administration, the new head, will bring new conditions, will bring wise and sane conditions. I am quite sure we will not have a repetition of the educational features of the forest reserves.

I have here a decision from the Treasury Department. It is quite familiar to Senators. It shows that approximately 200 forest rangers were attending universities at the expense of the Government. That has been stopped, and there is no use in spending time over it. I only call attention to it to give emphasis to the objections we have against the past and to give emphasis to the hope we have for the future.

The forest officials are quite anxious to know what the people think of them. I have here the ballot which they sent out, franked, through the United States mail as official business. I use this print because it is more convenient to handle than the documents that constitute the original record.

I will read one of them as a sample. Here is a copy of a letter that is sent out. It reads:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE, DISTRICT 2—G DISTRICT SUPERVISION,
Majestic Building, Denver, Colo., October 2, 1909.

To users of the national forests—

That is, to the beneficiaries of this system:

The object of the ballot appearing below, which is being sent to all persons holding grazing permits on the national forests is to learn whether or not the administration of the national forests under the present system of regulation has been beneficial to the people, and whether or not a continuance of the present policy for the preservation and wise use of the timber and other natural resources of the national forests meets with your approval. An early reply to the questions noted below and sent in the inclosed addressed envelope, which requires no postage, will be greatly appreciated.

PAUL G. REDINGTON,
Acting District Forester.

They want to know whether or not this man is appreciating the blessings that he is receiving under the special privileges. Now, here is the ballot:

Please answer the following questions by marking the letter X in the square under "yes" or "no:"

1. Has the regulation of grazing upon the national forests been beneficial to you?
2. Has it resulted in an improvement of general range conditions in your locality?
3. Do you believe that the boundaries of the national forests should be changed to exclude any land except agricultural land suitable for homestead settlement?

Then there is a blank space after each question in which to indicate the answer "yes" or "no."

The Senator from Utah has a number of responses, I have no doubt at all, that have been furnished him in reply to this suggestion.

I should like to know under what statute they frank a communication of that kind. I should like to know when Congress extended to Paul G. Redington, acting district forester, the franking privilege by which he may address a private citizen in regard to this matter or any other matter. I submitted this question to the Post-Office Department some time ago. I have a letter acknowledging receipt of the communication, but I have not yet received any interpretation of this right.

Please do not sign this ballot or write anything which might identify the person sending it.

There is the thing that gives away the spirit of it. They knew they were violating the law of the land, the law of right and of fairness, and they did not want anybody to know it; but these things will fall into the wrong hands in spite of them.

Why should they not want a man to whom they address a letter of inquiry to sign his name when he replies? Why should they desire that he be not identified? They indorsed the envelope and placed a frank upon it. Whose frank was placed upon it, do you suppose? I merely call attention to that in justification of our position in regard to these matters, and in order that Congress may give due credit to the protest that we enter against this despoliation of our great country.

I am gratified to say that since this question was made a live one in this body the sentiment of the Senate has been awakened, and it is no longer unpopular to hold up to criticism the proceedings of this bureau of the Government.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator from Idaho yield for a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I understood from what the Senator read that the letter from the forester was mailed in a franked envelope, and that it also inclosed a frank envelope for the reply. Is that correct?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. He not only violated the law himself, but he authorized another man to do it.

The stock argument here is that they are paying the States for the rights of which they are depriving them. According to an official letter which I received from the Secretary of Agriculture, bearing date of August 31, they realized from the forest reserves of Idaho $195,570, and under the act of Congress they returned to the State $48,892. That is the contribution they make to the maintenance of the government in the State that protects them, that administers the criminal and the civil law for them; and I pause to say that I am advised that in Idaho County alone it cost the county $8,000 last year to try the cases that originated upon the forest reserves. The county had to pay the expenses. It is only one instance. It is true in all the counties.

One more matter, and then I think I will have performed my duty. Can they violate the constitution of the State of Idaho? Can they take the constitution and the laws of the State of Idaho into their possession, and say what shall be done with the funds that come to the treasury of the State? Under the constitution and the admission act every dollar that is derived from the use or sale of school lands goes into the treasury for the school fund and can not be diverted, can not be used for any other purpose than the maintenance of the public schools. And yet the Congress has so far forgotten its duty and its obligation to the State and its respect for the laws of the State as to say that a portion of this money, a portion of the school fund, shall go to the making of public roads; and I can show you what portion of it, if I can find the paper I used here yesterday. However, I can not readily put my hand upon it. But they undertake to say that more than half of this fund shall go to the maintenance of the public roads of the State, when the constitution and the admission act say that it shall go to the school funds of the State. Another piece of high-handed——

Mr. GALLINGER. Have they done that?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; they have. Here is a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture congratulating me upon it. After giving me an enumeration of the sums paid to each county, aggregating $48,000, he says:

> It gives me great pleasure to notify you of this direct contribution of the national forests to the schools and roads in the counties of your State in which the forests lie.

I do not suppose Dick Turpin ever stopped to congratulate the person whom he treated in that way. It is an exercise of power because you have it, a disregard of the law of the land because they think they can get away with it. I am compelled to deal with these subjects in a very candid way.

Mr. President, the bill is ready to be put upon its passage, and were it not for my hope and belief in the fairness and justice of the new régime and the new administration of this department, there are amendments I would offer, but the purpose of the amendments can be effectuated by a change in the administrative policy of the department, by a fair recognition by the department of the rights of the people of the West, where these great reserves lie, by its restoration to the purposes for which the land was intended and for which it is adapted. Here are 200,000,000 acres of land that belong to all the people, West as well as East, and no part of which belongs to any man who does not go in person to get it; a wise provision of the land laws, upon which this country's great growth has rested. The man to get it must go after it. They could not get these lands in the broad and fertile prairies of Iowa and Illinois and Nebraska and other States by sitting around the stove in the country store and telling about it. They had to go out there; and when they went out there they met only the sky above and the land beneath them, and out of that and their energy they were compelled to carve the destiny not only of themselves, but of a great country; and they did it. Now, are you going to stop it? Are you going to throw anything before the progress upon which the past is based and upon which the future depends?

Mr. President, it is the sneer of the newspapers that I am treating the Senate to the regular tirade upon the forest question. That is one of their ways of expressing it. If they would devote just a little of their time to the calm and deliberate consideration of public questions of real application to public wants, they would accomplish more, because nothing that can be said or done will ever still my hand or quiet my voice in behalf of the people and the rights of the people upon whom depends the destiny of that great country lying west of the Mississippi. I care nothing whatever for the taunts and the sneers that are directed against a conscientious performance of duty, and I hesitate not one minute to occupy the time and demand the attention of this body in behalf of such a cause. I appreciate the treatment this question has received and is receiving in the growing understanding and the growing sympathy of this great body in the few years in which it has been a live and burning question. I found it here wrapped in the belief that the people in the West were there for the purpose of despoiling their country; that they had gone out there to steal something; forgetful of the fact that the men who have gone to the frontier have been selected men; that their average has been as high as the highest in the East.

The drones do not go across plains and mountains and suffer hardships and privations for any purpose, especially the purpose of subjecting themselves to labor and discomfort. It is the men who are inspired by ambition and equipped with the strength who have made our pioneers, and they are the last of all the people who should meet with neglect or rebuff at the hands of their representatives. When they claim their share, they claim no more in this age than those whom you represent claimed in theirs. Do you think that men go to those conditions and those countries out of the desire for pleasure alone? Do you think men suffer cold and hunger and privation and starvation in order that they may steal something from the Government, in order that they may wrongfully take the lands upon which they intend to make their homes?

Do you think that any man on earth ever took his family in an immigrant's wagon and trailed across the dust and sand of the plains and climbed the mountains in order that he might wrongfully take a piece of land? Do you think any man ever did it? The land grabbers are not in that country. When those people in the timidity that distinguishes them go to the land office to make proof or application for land they generally feel as though they were in the presence of the highest temple in the land. They are a good bit scared, and they are mighty timid. They do not know just what their rights are. They believe, and they have been taught to believe, that there is a great big, generous, gracious government that is going to enable them to get a home, not give it to them, because they have to earn it twenty times over in hardships and deprivations. When you count the cost, every homestead ever taken up in the United States has cost more to the man who took it than your homes cost you when you pay for them out of the easy money within your reach.

The settler goes before the land office timidly, and must ask the land officer, first, what his rights are and, second, how to get them, and by the time he is through and has paid what money he has to pay he is glad to get back and retreat to this little piece of land with his family. They generally live in a wagon, the white-covered wagon, for the first season, while they plant a little area of potatoes or a little patch of grain or some garden truck which may help them during the fall and winter. They live in the wagons. I have now in my mind's eye long lines of them, in what is now one of the most fertile sections of this country, which is now graced with elegant homes and farms and orchards. I saw those people coming over the old overland trail, down the Snake River, and across the valley of the Payette and the Weiser Valley. I saw them come there, and I saw them live, some of them all winter, in those wagons, because they had not got far enough ahead to make homes; and the next season they were out bright and early putting in their crops, planting the seed they had brought with them whence they came, and making their homes. I saw them year after year grow and clear off the sagebrush, not with hired crews, but I saw women and children and fathers and brothers plucking the sagebrush out with the crudest implements and methods imaginable. I recall to mind one woman who cleared with her own hands 20 acres of sagebrush to make a home for herself and her family.

Those are the people I speak for—and they exist not only in Idaho, but in every section of this country—as being held under the thrall and the blight of this system of paternalism that acts upon the assumption that your fellow-citizens, who were able and shrewd enough to go to that country, are not capable or honest in the management of their affairs. Suppose they come back here and put the eye of inspection upon the methods of the East. Think you not they would find as much ground to criticise you as you think you have to criticise them?

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. On page 48, line 12, after the semicolon, I move to insert the words:

> And for the investigation in this and foreign countries to discover the natural enemy of the white fly, and means for employing that for destroying the white fly, $10,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, line 12, after the word "dollars," insert:

> And for the investigation in this and foreign countries to discover the natural enemy of the white fly, and means of employing that for destroying the white fly, $10,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to say that, whereas some investigations have been going on and have been reasonably successful in a way, the appropriation at present is small, and the appropriations for these investigations as provided in this bill are small; and the experience and observation and judgment of the growers in Florida lead them to believe that the only effective way to exterminate this pest is to enable investigations to be made in foreign countries, or wherever the fly comes from, for the purpose of discovering his natural enemy and getting it to work on the fly itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Florida if this pest attacks the fruits of the Senator's State? Is that the kind of a nuisance it is? I do not know anything about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is it precisely, Mr. President. I did not care to go very much into detail, because I supposed it was understood. Paradoxical as it may seem, the white fly gets into an orange grove and turns it black in a very few days. It will do more damage and is doing more damage in one grove in Florida than this appropriation amounts to. It is a very destructive insect and propagates very rapidly. It is doing an enormous injury to the orange groves of that State, and not only to the orange, but the grape-fruit groves and the citrus family generally. The urgent appeal on the part of the growers is that an additional appropriation may be provided for the purpose of investigation in foreign countries or wherever may be found the natural enemy of this pest.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, the committee will offer no opposition to this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLLIVER. On page 48, lines 18 and 19, I move to change the total by striking out "$197,900" and inserting "$200,900," so as to read:

In all, for general expenses, $200,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 8, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES FOR THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CUSHMAN.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Saturday, April 2, at 2 o'clock p. m., be devoted to exercises on the life, character, and public services of the late Hon. FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN, a Representative from the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that Saturday, April 2, at 2 o'clock, be set apart for memorial services on the life and character of the late Representative FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR THE LATE SENATOR M'LAURIN.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, by order of the House next Sunday, March 13, was set apart for eulogies on the late Senator A. J. MCLAURIN. We find that the Senate has set the 2d of April for the services, and I ask unanimous consent to change the time from the 13th of March to Sunday, April 10.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to change the order of the House for memorial services of the late Senator MCLAURIN from March 13 to Sunday, April 10. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill (H. R. 21419).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all those who speak on this paragraph and the amendments thereto may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days upon this subject.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I beg to inquire of the gentleman whether unanimous consent was not given in the House when this post-office bill was taken up that all those who spoke should have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. WEEKS. I did not know whether the Chair would rule that that would apply to debate under the five-minute rule, but I desire to make a motion to close debate and that request for unanimous consent is a condition to the motion.

Mr. MANN. That request, of course, could not be granted in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct. The request would have to be made in the House.

Mr. MANN. I think that request was made and granted in the House when general debate was begun.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close at 1 o'clock, and that the paragraph and amendments be voted upon at that time.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire that the paragraph be read.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the paragraph that relates to the Rural Free-Delivery Service.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But there is more than one paragraph. This relates to the pay of the $37,000,000 only?

Mr. STAFFORD. The paragraph is the one that the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The other parts went out on a point of order.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Does this motion go only to the pending amendments, or to other amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. To all of them. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close at 1 o'clock, and that the paragraph and amendments thereto be voted upon at that time.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to offer an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I want to know what the status of the substitute is which was offered yesterday evening to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will give his attention to the Chair, the Chair will state the situation. The question will come first upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. Then, the question will come upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas. That is the situation at this time.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I understand that the point of order has been made against the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was not made. It was reserved.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I would like very much to have the point of order disposed of at this time. That is, if the point of order is to be pressed, I want it disposed of at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let us hear the substitute read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the substitute.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "thirty-eight million one hundred and forty-five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty-four million seven hundred and seventy-three thousand seven hundred and thirty-six."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw his point of order?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the substitute, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Change the amount to read "thirty-eight million one hundred and fifty thousand."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know whether this is not beyond the province of amendment. There was an amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], another by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and a substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER]. Now, there is an amendment to that substitute offered. Is not that in the fourth degree?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it has been customary in dealing with amendments to permit an amendment to the paragraph and an amendment to that amendment, a substitute for the amendment, and an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If I am correct, and I want to be informed, I understand the Chair has sustained the point of order made on all the provisions of this section from line 11, on page 30, down to and including line 2, on page 31.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is almost identical with the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] to the original amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendments are not identical.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, for information, may we have the amendments and the substitute reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the figures of the bill and of the various amendments.

There was no objection, and the figures were so reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries an appropriation of $37,645,000 for the rural mail service, the pay of carriers, installations, and all expenses connected therewith. It is admitted that this will not be sufficient to put in operation the routes already applied for and favorably reported upon, and will force the department having charge of this work to continue as it has done in the recent past to postpone or refuse to install new routes for the want of funds.

While I do not believe in extravagant appropriations, I am opposed to making this most useful branch of the public service the main and chief attack in an effort at economy, and therefore shall vote for an increase in the amount reported by the committee, in order, if possible, that the salaries of the carriers may be increased and that the Post-Office Department may be supplied with ample funds to establish those new routes which are demanded and needed by the people in extending, improving, and keeping up this service, which has done more to benefit the people of this Republic than anything that the Congress has done since I have been a Member of this House.

I will quote from the Postmaster-General's report for the fiscal year 1909:

The following statement shows the amount of mail of the various classes handled on rural routes during the year 1909 (an approximation based upon the three months' count herein described) and the year 1905, the increase, and the percentage of increase:

	Year 1909 (approximated).	Year 1905.	Increase.	Per cent of increase.

In discussing these figures, showing the business of the Rural Delivery Service, the Postmaster-General says:

This remarkable increase is conclusive evidence that the institution of rural delivery has enlarged the amount of the mails handled, and therefore increased the revenues. This is true, although 45 per cent of the bulk of the mail on rural routes is second-class matter, as the increase applies to all classes of matter, especially to letters and postal cards, the latter due to the enormous use of souvenir or picture post cards.

The average cancellations per route per month, according to the count kept during March, April, and May, 1909, are $14.92. The average cost of the service per route per month at this time is $72.17. It is not practicable to approximate the percentage of the mail delivered on rural routes, the revenues of which should properly be credited to the Rural Delivery Service. Taking the known revenue per route per month—the value of the stamps on the mail collected—from the average cost per route per month, and rural delivery is costing $57.25 per route per month. The query naturally arises as to whether or not there is any way by which this service may be made to increase the postal revenue. With regard to equipment, rural carriers are required to provide an outfit suitable to carry the mail. In most instances this consists of a wagon or buggy, in which from 150 to 200 pounds of mail can be easily carried. The average weight of the mail on each trip of a rural carrier is about 25 pounds. It is believed at present that in comparatively few instances does the daily weight of the mail of a carrier exceed 50 pounds.

There now exists throughout the country almost as much of a network of rural telephone lines as of rural delivery routes. In cities and towns a merchant's patrons use the telephone to order goods to be delivered. The rural population, however, except adjacent to the cities, do not have the advantage of delivery enjoyed by the urban population. The best means for the delivery of merchandise in rural districts therefore exists in the rural carriers who are daily traversing their routes. The present rate of postage on merchandise, designed to cover the cost of the carriage of parcels throughout the country, is prohibitive of the carriage of parcels from the merchant located at the distributing post-office to the patrons of rural delivery.

These conditions present an opportunity for making the Rural Delivery Service a source of greater revenue to the Government. I have, therefore, to recommend, in line with recommendations made in several previous annual reports, that the Postmaster-General be authorized to arrange, experimentally, for a limited period, for the delivery of packages on rural routes at such rates as may seem expedient, the result of the experiment to be reported to Congress as speedily as possible after the expiration of the experimental period.

It will be seen that this service can be made a source of greater revenue to the Government, and if Congress will establish, or authorize to be established, a parcels post on these rural delivery lines I am satisfied that the revenues would greatly increase and the people be much benefited thereby. If I have an opportunity I shall vote for an amendment which will be offered providing for the establishing of a rural route parcels-post delivery system for parcels originating on the routes established.

Doubtless the farmers who must depend upon the rural route service for their mails will be deprived of this benefit by a point of order which will be made against it by the chairman of this committee, but I trust the day will come when public sentiment and justice to the people will force Congress to consider this proposition and enact it into law.

As will be seen from that portion of the Postmaster-General's report I have quoted it is favored by him, and has been recommended by the Postmaster-General on several other occasions, and such a provision would prove of incalculable benefit to our rural population, upon whose labor and energies the prosperity of our entire country at all times depend.

We already have by international agreement with the nations of the world a foreign parcels post by which 11 pounds of merchandise can be sent through the mails to foreign countries for 25 cents, and by law parcels of 4 pounds can now be carried in the mails for 16 cents a pound, which is so high as to be prohibitive; but a rural parcels post, confined to routes upon which the parcels originate or are sent at a reasonable rate of postage, can harm no one, and will bring a large revenue to the Government. I shall support such a proposition, and hope in the near future to see the rural route parcels-post system adopted. I shall vote, as I have heretofore, for an increase in the salaries of the rural letter carriers. These carriers are compelled to furnish their own teams and vehicles, and when they have paid out of the sum allowed for salary the expense incident to maintaining these they have scarcely sufficient left of the salary to meet the necessary expense of living for themselves and families. I shall vote for such a sum as will give the carrier $1,200 per annum.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] has offered an amendment reported by the committee from $37,645,000 to $38,145,000. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] has offered an amendment increasing the amount to $38,860,000; the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] another, making the amount $44,773,760. I shall vote for that sum which will give to the department of the Government charged with establishing and carrying on this service such an amount as will enable the people to have these routes established and maintained, where the conditions require them in the interest of the people, who have been so greatly benefited—yes, blessed by having this service—a service to which they are entitled as much as those who may live in the large cities. As I have stated, Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], which provides an appropriation of $38,860,000, and this amount is necessary in order to properly care for those routes already investigated. There is no service of the Government, and the report of the Postmaster-General shows it, which has increased so rapidly as has the Rural Free-Delivery Service. The gentleman from North Carolina has succinctly stated that for the want of funds certain necessary routes that have been investigated and reported upon as being necessary and which have been approved by the inspectors and agents of the Goverment have failed to be installed by reason of the fact that there were not sufficient funds at hand.

I hold in my hand letters from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General showing that at least three routes in my district, which were approved and reported upon as being necessary and as meeting all the requirements of the department, were not installed, for the reasons given, which are as follows:

I read from a letter from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General:

In reply you are advised that, upon reexamination, this petition has been found to contain sufficient merit to warrant an investigation, but in view of the existing condition of the finances of the Government and the consequent necessity for strict economy in all branches of the public service, the installation of rural delivery is being deferred for the present.

Now, in reference to another one, which was reported upon favorable in May of last year, and which has not yet been installed, he says:

It may be further stated that, in view of the existing condition of the finances of the Government and of the consequent necessity for strict economy in all branches of the public service, it is deemed advisable, after careful consideration, to defer further installation of rural delivery for the present except where necessary to maintain the efficiency of the service in operation or where the establishment of new service seems imperatively required to meet demands which can not be met by means of existing facilities.

Now, another one, under date of October 27, 1909, in regard to a proposed rural route from Gray. That service had been approved and recommended to be established in May last. I had a letter from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General saying it would be installed in June, and every month inquiry was made, as late as October 23, 1909, and this is what he says:

In reply you are informed that it is not possible at this time to advise definitely as to when this service will be installed. Orders for the establishment of the rural delivery are being held in abeyance for the present, with a view to the installation of the service during the current fiscal year on the most economical basis possible.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I live in a city, it is true, but I live in a city which has free delivery to the merchants and to the citizens, and that free delivery extends all over that city. I live also in an agricultural district in the very heart of a State which produces, next to Texas, the largest number of bales of cotton of any State in the Union, whose products, with the other Southern States, clothe the world; whose raw product brings back into this country every year from four hundred and fifty to six hundred millions of dollars in gold. Last year Georgia produced a cotton crop that was worth $100,000,000, and, with the other farmers of the South, produced a cotton crop that has been, and is, the greatest factor in producing the prosperity we have enjoyed and are now enjoying. This, the greatest product of the farm of the United States, which is worth more as a wealth-producing product than any other, two-thirds of which, in its unmanufactured condition, is exported into the markets of the world, is made and produced by those whose interests are at stake in the establishing, continuing, and maintaining the Rural Delivery Service. We can economize in other directions. We can very well afford to leave off building for a while immense battle ships that cost from ten to twelve millions each. We can reduce our military and naval and other unnecessary and useless expenditures. But, in the name and in the interest of the rural population of my own district and State, I protest that this service, which reaches their homes and families and which has been of so much benefit, shall not be crippled or retarded by withholding from it the necessary appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I must object to extending any time, as there are several members of the committee who wish to speak, and more than enough gentlemen to take the time up to 1 o'clock who desire to be heard.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, while amendments for increase of salary and equipment would probably be obnoxious to the rules and subject to a point of order, there are, nevertheless, some equalizations and improvements that can be secured by an increase in the amount provided in this appropriation. There are not only a number of new routes reported which ought to be installed, but there are a great many routes on which carriers are being compelled to travel from 2 to 6 miles of excessive distance without any additional pay. If we can not manage to increase the pay in accordance with the work done, we should cut off the routes to the standard length, which would necessitate the formation of new routes in order to take care of the parts of those thus cut off. So there will be the necessary expenditure of more money, for many new standard routes could and should be formed as a result of such rearrangement.

On the other hand, in the effort to economize, in those cases where the routes are below the standard length, if the route is only a small fraction of a mile short under the gradation adopted, the carrier is compelled to lose the pay for two whole miles, which is not treating that carrier right any more than the other one just referred to, who is compelled to travel from 2 to 6 miles' excessive distance without pay.

The Government should be honest with its servants. It is not treating either of these classes of carriers honestly, and yet the Division of Rural Delivery is hampered by the amount of the appropriations and the cry for economy, and is thus compelled to permit these conditions to continue. An increase in the amount of the appropriation will enable the Division of Rural Delivery to equalize these conditions and treat those carriers fairly by lengthening some of the short routes and cutting off the excessive distances of the long routes, putting in new standard routes wherever the equalization renders them necessary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe in economy in proper cases, but if we have not money enough to supply both necessaries and luxuries I would provide the necessaries first and curtail the luxuries. [Applause.] This service is an absolute necessity to the country people. Let us give it to them efficiently and save money somewhere else. [Applause.] We can appropriately save the amount we need here by cutting off one or two battle ships or many other useless things I might mention. I regret that under the rules we can not increase the salaries at this time, but we will accomplish much if by increasing this appropriation we enable the Division of Rural Delivery to make such readjustment of inequalities as will pay carriers honestly according to the work they do and allot to each one approximately the standard amount of work. It is also unfair to the patrons on the return part of the route to delay the carrier by compelling him to travel 5 or 6 excessive miles and reach them correspondingly late. All are entitled to prompt service. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment there is no service in this country that has accomplished as much good for the people at large as this Rural Delivery Service. When I first came here I favored it, and during the Fifty-seventh Congress I advocated this service in a speech made upon the floor of this House, and from then until now I have done what I could to advance it wherever it was possible to do so to meet the necessities of the people. I do not see for the life of me how anybody upon the floor of this House can stand in the way of the necessary extension of this service to the people of this country. Nobody denies the efficiency of it, because we find from the official reports made by the Postmaster-General that of all the public servants who are engaged in the service of this country there are none who are more efficient, there are none who are more capable, there are none who are more energetic than the rural-delivery carriers. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I beg to call the attention of the House to page 4 of the report of the honorable Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, recently made to the Postmaster-General, under the heading "Rural letter carriers," which reads as follows:

RURAL LETTER CARRIERS.

During the past year 2,526 resignations of carriers were accepted, which is 19 per cent greater than the number accepted during the preceding fiscal year; whereas there was a decrease in the number of resignations from the year ended June 30, 1907. However, the number of carriers resigning is only 6 per cent of the number of carriers in the service June 30, 1909. Two hundred and three carriers were separated from the service by death. Out of 40,499 carriers only 175 were dismissed for cause, which is an increase of but 10 over the number during the previous fiscal year. Of the carriers dismissed, 36 were for embezzlement of funds and 35 for intoxication.

Mr. Chairman, I join with Mr. SIMS, of Tennessee, when he says:

I pause to ask: Was there ever such a record made in the public service of any government—city, State, or national—in the history of the world, ancient or modern, where out of a body of 40,499 officials there was so small a number of dismissals for cause in one year? Think for a moment, that each and every one of this vast army of government officials each and every day of his official service handles actual sums of money, of currency, and only 36 out of the 40,000 yielded to the ever-present temptation and became embezzlers. I beg you, Mr. Chairman, to consider the almost unbelievable statement that out of this number of more than 40,000 men selected from every part of every State in these United States, who must go through heat and cold, mud and dust, fair weather and foul, that the dismissals for drunkenness for a whole year were only 35. Where is there another nation on this earth that can make such an exhibit of honesty and good behavior in any equal number of its citizens subject to like temptations and hardships?

Mr. Chairman, I am proud of this great body of men. To this great army of model citizens I point with pride as the best evidence of the fruit of our glorious free institutions.

Some of these carriers by their faithful service, as is shown by the report of the Postmaster-General, have been separated from the service by death, being martyrs to the public service, because it was in the service of their country that they contracted the disease that brought their death and that placed them as martyrs upon the altar of faithful duty well performed. [Applause.] I can not see how anybody can oppose this additional appropriation for the extension of this service, when everybody realizes and recognizes the fact that unless additional appropriations are made this service can not be extended and the carriers can not get any increase of pay.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. You are in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER], which increases the allowance to $44,000,000, in order that we may pay the carriers $90 a month on standard routes?

Mr. CANDLER. I certainly am, because I want enough money appropriated by this Government to pay these carriers reasonably for their services and to extend the service, and the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas will accomplish these results, and no other amendment pending will do so.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. CANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the amount proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] and of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] do anything more than provide for the routes that have already been favorably reported? In other words, will they permit any further extension of the Rural Delivery Service?

Mr. CANDLER. It will not, and therefore I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER]. The gentleman from North Carolina frankly admitted on the floor of this House yesterday that the appropriation which he proposes will simply provide for the routes that will be approved up to July 1. Therefore, under the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from South Carolina, during the whole of the next fiscal year there will be no money to extend the service in this country, and this great service for the people of this country would stop and stand still, because there would be no money to put a single solitary route into operation during the next fiscal year.

Do you want to throttle the rural people of this country? Do you want to separate them from all convenient postal connection with their Government, and say to them, "You shall not receive any benefit from the Government in this way, although you are doing more than any people in all of this land to sustain it?" You call upon them for taxes to support the Government, and with fidelity and patriotism to the Republic in which we live they respond; and when they come to ask us to help them, then you turn a deaf ear to their call for relief, and turn them down when they come to you and ask for the same service which you are giving to the people of the cities. Gentlemen, I have a statement here, which I will put in the RECORD, which shows the pay of the city carriers—and I have nothing to say against them—and the pay of the carriers in the country, and it shows partiality in favor of the city carriers. That statement is in a letter from the Postmaster-General, and is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1910.

Hon. E. S. CANDLER, Jr.,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: With reference to your communication of the 23d instant, relative to the salaries paid the several classes of city and rural carriers and what equipment and other expenses, if any, are allowed by the Government, I beg to state that under the act of March 2, 1907, city carriers are divided into six grades, with salaries as follows: First grade, $600; second grade, $800; third grade, $900; fourth grade, $1,000; fifth grade, $1,100; and sixth grade, $1,200. Carriers at first-class post-offices are promoted successively from the first to the fifth grade at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's service in the next lower grade, upon evidence that their services have been efficient and faithful; and those in second-class post-offices from the first to the fourth grade in the same manner and under the same conditions.

The pay of rural carriers is based upon the length of routes, varying from $396 per annum on a route from 6 to 8 miles in length to $900 per annum on a route 24 miles and over in length.

Both city and rural carriers are provided with the necessary satchels and straps for use in handling the mails, and city carriers who are required to use vehicles in the performance of their duties receive allowances averaging approximately $275 each for the maintenance of their equipment.

Very truly, yours,
F. H. HITCHCOCK,
Postmaster-General.

Mr. Chairman, this statement shows that the city carrier is given allowances averaging $275 and gets better pay than the rural carrier, while the rural carrier gets no allowances. You may think that equal justice, but I do not. I warn you to listen to the people. If you do not do so, and stand in the way of the extension of this service, you will hear from them, and do not you doubt it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to be very frank with the Members of this House. I introduced the substitute for the sole purpose of giving every Member an opportunity, if he wanted to do so, to vote to increase the salary of carriers on rural routes. On this bill we can not legislate directly to increase the salary of the rural-route carriers. But we can increase the appropiation, and that is the effect of my substitute. And if the substitute is adopted we will have money enough to establish all the routes now applied for and still have enough left to pay to each carrier $100 per year over and above what they now receive, and which is not nearly adequate for the services rendered by these efficient public servants.

I call your attention to the status of this substitute. In the first place, a member of this committee introduced an amendment, and immediately another member of the same committee gets the floor and introduces a second amendment for the purpose of cutting out other amendments that may be offered. When the substitute amendment is offered increasing the appropriation from thirty-seven or thirty-eight millions to forty-four millions and more dollars, immediately another member of the committee gets the floor and introduces an amendment to the substitute increasing the amount of the appropriation in the sum of $500,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The effect of your amendment will be to pay the carriers of the full routes $90 a month instead of $75.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. It will add over $100 a year to the present salaries.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's amendment is in such form that it will do what the gentleman says, it will be subject to the point of order.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Oh, Mr. Chairman, it will not do anything of the kind. We can not do it in this bill, and the gentleman from Massachusetts knows it as well as I do. We wish to have this appropriation increased, and then the other body in this Capitol will probably increase the salaries. If they want to do so, this will enable them to do it, and when it comes back here with that phraseology increasing the salaries there will not be a vote on the floor against that increase. [Loud applause.] We can not legislate in this matter on this bill and they can.

I want to say that my colleague from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] introduced a bill that went to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, proposing to increase the allowance for horse maintenance, or making the allowance for horse maintenance $100 per year for these carriers, but no report comes out of this committee on this subject. They are reporting increases upon almost everything with reference to carriers, but not on that.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why does not the gentleman seek to call it up on the calendar?

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. This bill is in the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and has not been reported.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Can not the gentleman move to discharge the committee and take it up on the floor himself?

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. That is not the way to do it, and what I think the gentleman from Missouri himself wants to do he will have an opportunity to do if he will vote for the substitute increasing the amount of these appropriations—then they will get the increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I realize that it may be considered somewhat an ungracious thing at this time to ask to have this appropriation for Rural Free-Delivery Service materially increased. I would not do it if I were not convinced of the fact that that service has not been treated as fairly as other services have been treated. I am quite in sympathy with the proposition for economy, but my notion of economy is not to cut out everything you can, but to eliminate from the appropriations only those things which ought to be cut out. I understand, Mr. Chairman, it is abroad in the land that Free Rural Delivery Service is costing more than it ought to cost, but it is charged with expenses with which it has no business to be charged. Mr. Chairman, we can not at this time turn back from the course upon which we have entered. Free rural delivery is one of the great permanent institutions of our country. It is not yet complete. The carriers began their work at very insufficient salaries. It has been the policy of the Government to increase salaries until they should, at least, approximate the value of their services. Adequate compensation has not been reached, even in comparison with other employees of the Post-Office Department. A majority of this House believes that the carriers' salaries should be increased. A majority believes in extending the service until all of our people in settled portions of the country receive rural service.

It is proposed practically to stop the extension of rural free delivery. I can not be governed by what gentlemen on the committee may say, for I am controlled by information from the Post-Office Department, which comes to me, when I ask for the extension of this service. Furthermore, it is a notorious fact that the rural free-delivery men are not receiving the compensation which is necessary in order to keep them in the service, and as the gentleman from Kansas has said, the object of this amendment——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very sorry, but I have only five minutes, and my time is nearly exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The proposition as presented by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] is to enlarge this appropriation to the extent of about $7,000,000. This is for the purpose of fixing a standard salary of $90 a month, and an increase of $2.50 a month for every mile or major fraction thereof in excess of 24 miles, and a decrease of $2.50 per mile per month for every mile or major fraction thereof less than 24 miles traveled by the carrier. It also provides for an extension of the free Rural Delivery Service in accordance with the policy which this Government has embarked upon. I say to you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we can not afford to check the extension of the Free Rural Delivery Service. Extension and improvement of free rural delivery are a part of our national platform; it is a part of the policy of this Government to proceed along that line, and whatever gentlemen may do to keep down this appropriation, in order that the department may delay rural-service extension, I say the policy of extending that service will be maintained, and we can not afford to face the issue of ceasing to extend it, not only as a political policy, but as a matter of justice, as a matter in the highest interest of the welfare of the country itself, we can not afford to cripple or hamper a department which comes in direct contact with more of our people than any other. So, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas may prevail in this House, and am only sorry that, on account of my time limit, I can not proceed further. [Applause.]

Mr. DAWSON. On the question of the compensation of the rural carrier, and in substantiation of the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] that men are leaving this service because of inadequate pay, I desire to submit the following letter from one of the rural carriers living in my district, whose name I withhold for obvious reasons. He says:

> It does seem strange to me how any fair-minded man can say that we are getting enough pay at the present price of everything. If Mr. Hitchcock has a way to suggest whereby we can lay up something for a rainy day on $75 per month, with hay at $15 per ton, corn 65 cents, oats 45 cents, it will be cheerfully received by us all.
> I know that at the end of the year 1909 I had to borrow money to pay the interest on a home that I am trying to pay for. And I know that for this month my hay and grain alone cost me $25, saying nothing about other expenses. It has been a conundrum which I have been trying to solve, how a man can keep a family of five, when it takes almost half of his wages to feed his team and keep his rigs in repair.
> I intend to jump my job if there is not something done during this session of Congress, as men are getting $2 and $2.50 a day and do not have any expenses but their families to support.
> I have a motocycle and horse, but I have had to get another horse this winter on account of the deep snow. I have about $450 invested in the necessary things to run a mail route with.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the statement that was being made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] when his time expired, and I am very anxious to have him pursue the line of argument which he was making, in order that when the time for voting comes I may be able to decide which side of this question I shall vote upon. I ask the gentleman from Kansas if he will be kind enough to pursue the thought which he was presenting to the committee when his time expired? I ask him to do that in my time.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I object to that.

Mr. MADDEN. I am asking him to do it in my time.

Mr. WEEKS. I submit to the gentleman from Illinois that he should ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask him to pursue the line of statement that he was making at the time his time expired.

Mr. WEEKS. I object to that.

Mr. MADDEN. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas to tell us why it is important that this additional amount of money should be appropriated.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that question——

Mr. MADISON. May I suggest in addition to that that the gentleman from Kansas tell us how the addition of this amount will, in fact, bring about an increase of the salaries of the rural carriers?

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, in answer to both these questions I will say that if this amount offered in the substitute is adopted, and then this bill goes to the Senate, the Senate will find that we have appropriated money enough to put in all the rural routes that are being asked for all over the United States, and they ought to be put in just as rapidly as possible, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. In addition to that, in my judgment, there will be sufficient money, so that the Senate, if it desires to do it, can insert the necessary legislation to give to these men in the service who are underpaid a sufficient amount, at least, to give them a living for the services they are rendering to the Government of the United States.

Mr. MADISON. Will that legislation be in this bill?

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Yes.

The facts are, Mr. Chairman, that we have increased the salaries for carriers at offices of the first and second class until now they receive from $1,100 to $1,200 per year, and in this bill we have provided for an appropriation of $250,000 to pay traveling expenses of railway mail clerks while on duty; and it was my pleasure to support both of these increases. But what excuse can anyone give for voting to pay these classes a salary of about $1,200 per year and then only allow carriers on rural routes $900 per year? Carriers in the city have no money invested in equipment; have no such hardships to endure as rural carriers have. The latter are required to keep from three to four horses and wagon, and these, with harness, cost anywhere from $500 to $1,000, and then the expense of keeping up the same. The country carrier must be up before daylight to feed and get his horse ready, and the good housewife must be up and have breakfast at break of day, so her husband may start early on his route. It makes no difference what kind of weather; he must go. I want to say that I regard it as little less than an outrage that we should pay the one class, with no money invested in equipment and with comparatively few hardships to undergo, $1,100, and the other, with this large outlay and with all kinds of hardships to endure, demand of them this service for only $900. Others may be satisfied with this kind of treatment for these men, but I want to serve notice here and now that until justice is done the rural-route carriers of the country my voice and vote will be against every appropriation of public money that is not absolutely essential for the support of the Government.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in a few words I desire to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], a member of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that that amendment is not now being considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The entire paragraph is before the committee.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I regretted very much to hear the able gentleman from Michigan undertake to inject politics into this question. There is no politics in this question, no matter whether any political platform declared for it or not. This is one of the services of the Government that serves everybody irrespective of politics. No man on this floor, nor any other place, can be found who is a more ardent supporter of Free Rural Delivery Service than I am. Time forbids me to pause and extol the glories that have been brought about as a result of Free Rural Delivery Service. We all agree upon this proposition. I do not believe Congress has ever enacted a law that has redounded to as much universal good for the whole people of this country as the rural service has. But, Mr. Chairman, we have abundantly provided for the full extension of the Free Rural Delivery Service in this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman does not think the present salary of free rural delivery carriers is sufficient, does he?

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I can not yield now, my time is short. If I believed for a moment we were cutting the appropriation for this item below what it ought to be, I would unhesitatingly stand on this floor in favor of an appropriation large enough to go ahead and complete the Rural Delivery Service next year, but I feel, after having gone through the matter in committee, that we have abundantly provided for an appropriation large enough to enable the Post-Office Department to go forward in the work of establishing and perfecting the rural delivery service, and it is for this reason that I unhesitatingly support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] making the appropriation $38,150,000, and I hope that the motion made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] will be voted down. His motion carries approximately $5,500,000 more than will be necessary for the service, and we certainly ought to look at it along conservative and economical lines, and not needlessly and lavishly appropriate the people's money, every dollar of which must be raised by taxation, by appropriating money that is not needed for the extension of the Free Rural Delivery Service next year.

But, Mr. Chairman, I believe the present postal authorities are subject to criticism for their relation in regard to the rural free delivery. I am afraid that there is a disposition on the part of the Postmaster-General to curtail the further extension of this system, and if there be such a disposition on the part of the Postmaster-General, for one I desire to oppose his idea and his policy along this line. Reading from page 35 of his report, he makes use of the following language:

In view of the fact that a service of such magnitude has grown up within a few years, it would not be surprising if on careful review and inspection it were found possible to make certain rearrangements with advantage and even to discontinue some of the routes without detriment to the patrons of the rural service. Some work in this direction has been accomplished during the past year, but much remains to be done. In view of the increasing deficit and the large excess of the expenditures for the maintenance of rural service over the revenue from mail originating on the route, the present would seem to be an opportune time to make special effort to perfect existing service rather than to continue its rapid extension to territory where the conditions may not be altogether favorable for the establishment of new routes.

Mr. Chairman, to my mind this language is rather significant. Can it be possible that the Postmaster-General of his own motion and initiative has determined to curtail the establishment of new rural routes in the future? Has he determined to set himself up as a censor determining when and where a new rural route should be established? If so, I desire to oppose him on this proposition, believing that his extreme desire to practice economy in his department is and will be a desire upon his part to practice economy against a deserving class of people, to wit, the farmers. I would not undertake to raise in this discussion class against class or section against section, but I would especially bespeak a square deal between citizens and persons living in cities and towns and persons living in the country.

The Post-Office is indeed a peculiar department in many ways, particularly in the way and manner it derives its revenue. It is supported exclusively by its patrons; people who patronize it by buying stamps, sending or receiving mail matter through the Post-Office Department; and the people living in the country contribute their full share along this line, and they are entitled to have a full share of the benefits that flow to them in return. The bill carries an item of $31,000,000 for letter carriers engaged in delivering the mail to the people living and residing in cities and towns having free delivery, and to the end that the mail in the city or town having free delivery may be properly delivered, the bill carries another item of $1,100,000 as pay for substitute letter carriers in cities and towns, making a total of $32,100,000 in these two items alone. In addition to this, the bill carries a large amount of other items, such as horse hire, rental of vehicles, bicycle allowance, street-car service, all going to enable a complete and perfect delivery system of the mail to the people living in cities and towns having a free-delivery service. In a number of the larger cities mail is delivered to the business man five, six, or seven times per day, and in the residence portion of many of the larger cities mail is delivered two and three times per day. This being true, certainly the people living in the rural districts are entitled to have their mail delivered to them once each day per week, except Sunday.

This would be giving a square deal between the man living in the city and the man living in the country, and nothing short of this will be even-handed justice between man and man. It should not be the purpose of the Government to play favorites in this work; it should not undertake to make fish of one and fowl of another, as every consumer, no matter how slight be his consumption, is taxed in some way to raise revenue to support the Government, so ought appropriations to be so made as to fall upon the shoulders of all, "like the gentle dews from heaven, thrice blessing him who gives, as well him who receives."

Mr. Chairman, I have certain rural routes in my district now which meet the requirements of the law in every respect, and I have taken it up with the Post-Office Department, both in person and by correspondence, and have been met with the statement that no objection can be found to the petition, but, on account of economy and for lack of funds, the Post-Office Department is not now extending the free-delivery service. One of these letters I now have in my possession, and which I desire to make a part of my remarks, is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, February 15, 1910.

Hon. W. E. Cox,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Recurring to your personal call at the department at which time you left a letter from Mr. E. C. Zallman, of Otisco, Ind., relative to a proposed rural delivery route to start from that place, you are informed that while the necessary requirements affecting this proposed service have been met, owing to the existing condition of the finances of the Government and the consequent necessity for strict economy in all branches of the public service, the installation of rural delivery is being deferred for the present, and the petition in question has therefore been filed for future consideration.

Mr. Zallman's letter is herewith inclosed.

Very respectfully,
P. V. DE GRAW,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

And it is evident that many other petitions for extensions of free rural delivery are now lying dormant in the Post-Office Department, not being installed, as the post-office says, for want of money, and for this reason I am for the increased appropriation made by the gentleman from Wisconsin. If his amendment obtains and carries it will give to the Post-Office Department for the year 1911 for the establishment of free rural-delivery service the sum of $1,150,000, and I am assured that this will be all the money that the Post-Office Department can possibly use for the establishment of rural routes during the next fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, in the last two or three months the country has been aroused as never before upon the present deficit in the Post-Office Department. The Postmaster-General in his report says at the close of the fiscal year 1909 that the deficit was $17,441,719.82, and it is approximately that amount to-day. The Postmaster-General in his report undertakes to leave the impression that a large part of this deficit is due to the cost of free rural delivery. In speaking of the cost of free rural delivery on page 34 of his report he uses this language:

On June 30, 1909, 40,628 rural routes were in operation. The expenditures on account of the rural service for the fiscal year ending on that date (1909) were $35,661,034. Compared with the previous year there has been an increase of 1,351 routes and of $1,289,095 in expenses. From account kept in March, April, and May, 1909, it was shown that the average amount of postage on mail collected on a rural route was $14.92 a month. This means that the cost of service on a rural route exceeded the revenue derived from the postage on the mail originated thereon by $687 per year. On that basis the cost of all the rural routes in operation at the close of the last fiscal year exceeded the revenue from matter mailed thereon by more than $27,900,000.

It will be seen that the Postmaster-General tries to leave the impression that Free Rural Delivery Service is run at an enormous loss, and that this is responsible for part of the present postal deficit.

Mr. Chairman, if we undertake to run the Free Rural Delivery Service as a banker runs his bank account, by balancing the books each evening at the close of banking hours, showing total receipts and disbursements of the bank during the day, there might be some force in the Postmaster-General's argument. But it is an impossibility to run the Free Rural Delivery Service upon the same principle that a banker runs his bank. It is unfair for the Postmaster-General to use this as an argument, either as tending to show that the cost of free rural delivery is responsible for the present postal deficit or to show that the present free rural delivery system is run at a loss.

I have made some investigations along this line, and an examination of the following letter, which I have received from the Post-Office Department showing the postal deficit each year since the beginning of the establishment of the Free Rural Delivery Service, will completely refute the argument made by the Postmaster-General that the present deficit is in any way responsible for the cost of free rural delivery. The letter which I have received is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1910.

Hon. W. E. COX,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of February 14, 1910, I have to submit the following statement showing the annual deficit of the Post-Office Department since the institution of Rural Delivery Service and the annual appropriation for said service:

Year.	Deficit.	Appropriation.
1901	3,923,728	1,750,700
1902	2,937,650	4,080,075
1903	4,560,044	8,580,364
1905	14,572,584	21,116,600
1906	10,516,909	25,828,300
1907	6,653,283	28,200,000
1908	16,873,223	34,900,000

Yours, very truly,
F. H. HITCHCOCK.
Postmaster-General.

By an examination of the above table it will be observed that in the year 1897, when the appropriation for Free Rural Delivery Service was only $40,000, that the deficit in that year amounted to $11,411,780. What produced the deficit during this year? It can not be argued that it was due to appropriations for rural delivery, nor can the deficit in that year be in any way laid at the door of this service. Some other cause must be found for the deficit for the year 1897 other than the cost of rural delivery, and in looking for some other cause to-day we must look to some other source other than the appropriations made for rural delivery service. In my judgment, it is due to the many leaks here and there in the Post-Office Department, and especially to the overpayment to railroads for the transportation of mails.

Mr. Chairman, the financial and educational benefit of rural routes to the country are beyond computation. Indeed, they may be called "common schools on wheels." This system has in a measure annihilated distance, brought the man living in a city and the fellow living in the country in close conjunction with each other, and, as a result, it has been the means of improving country life, the like of which this country has not observed heretofore. The farmer is no longer to be considered an isolated individual, living alone far away from the centers of population, but he has become to-day a potential factor in the finances of this country. To him, and him alone, the business man looks for immediate and future success. The failure of the farmer means equal failure to the business man, and their interests have become so interwoven that it is impossible to separate the two.

Mr. Chairman, there was a time in the history of this country when the business depended upon the man living in the city, but this condition no longer exists to-day. The real downright business man, the financial power, is the man living in the country. We had the best illustration of this during the panic of 1907, when all of a sudden, like a clap of thunder from a clear sky, almost every bank in this country suspended payment, the wheels of industry all over the land became paralyzed, money could not be had at any rate of interest; but the cry instantaneously went up, "Wait until the farmers' crops begin to move," and as soon as they did move, ships could not carry foreign gold to this country as fast as it naturally flowed to our shores. Soon every bank opened its doors, resumed payment, the wheels of industry started up, the hum and whirl of business was heard throughout the land; and I for one stand ready and willing to vote enough money to go forward to a completion of the Rural Delivery Service to the end that the rural people may have their just share of appropriations, become educated, put in immediate touch with the centers of population, so that the farmer can deal at arm's length with men in high finance in the cities, and anything that tends to strike down this system of delivery tends to destroy the upbuilding of our country. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin carries an abundance of money to complete the work now under progress, and there is no use of appropriating the amount of money carried by the gentleman from Kansas in his amendment, because this would be a needless waste of the people's money, uncalled for, and could not be used in the department. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, for any member of the House to vote to add more than $7,000,000 to a single appropriation reported by a committee of the House, especially in a year when economy is being demanded all along the line, is a vote that requires explanation. I shall, however, vote with a clear conscience for the amendment to this paragraph offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] to increase the proposed appropriation for the pay of letter carriers, and for the Rural Free Delivery Service generally, from $37,645,000 to $44,773,736. This amendment, in my judgment, ought to be supported and passed for two reasons: The first is that more rural routes may be established; and second, that the pay of the rural carriers may be increased.

I confess to some enthusiasm for the Free Rural Delivery Service inaugurated thirteen years ago. I am convinced that no money expended by the Government is better expended than this. These free rural routes since 1897, when they were first begun, have done much to revolutionize country life. As a civilizing influence, as well as an immense convenience to the farmers and other dwellers in the rural districts, this rural mail service is beyond expression valuable. That it does not pay, in dollars and cents, that the Government spends more upon these routes, even far more, than is received by the additional sale of postage stamps, is to that extent perhaps unfortunate, but is no reason whatever why the rural free-delivery system should be curtailed. Everybody knew when it was inaugurated that it would not pay in dollars and cents, but no one conceived, no matter how much they may have anticipated from the service, no one adequately foretold how immensely popular and valuable to the communities, not only through which the carrier plies his duties, but to the towns and cities contiguous to the routes, and indeed to all the people generally, this service would prove. The service has brought the people of the country nearer to one another and to the people of the towns. It has brought the daily paper to tens of thousands of homes where it could not have appeared before. It puts the farmer in touch with the market in a way that was impossible before. It has immeasurably improved the roads of the country, the greatest civilizing influence possible in rural communities, and it has in every way promoted the pleasure, the convenience, and the attractiveness of country life. As I have said before upon this floor, there is in my judgment no higher duty devolving upon the Members of this House than to encourage and support every reasonable expenditure looking to the betterment of rural conditions, so as to keep enterprising men and women in the country and thus to improve the conditions of farming, the productiveness of the land, and consequently to enlarge the supply of food.

At the close of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1909, there were 40,628 rural-delivery routes established in the Post-Office Department, with substantially the same number of carriers employed. The average annual increase in the number of routes since the year 1897, when the system was inaugurated, has been 2,935. The average annual increase in appropriations during these thirteen years has been $2,637,864. The increase carried in this bill over the appropriation for the same purpose made last year is only $285,000, which I submit is wholly inadequate. The number of new rural routes already approved amounts to about 1,500, and this increase will not provide for the establishment of more than about one-third of them. I submit that in this great work there should be no backward step, but that the money should be provided by Congress to establish these routes as fast as they are surveyed and approved by the post-office inspectors and authorities.

But fully as important, as it seems to me, as the growth of the service itself, is the appeal that comes, if not from the carriers themselves, from every consideration of fairness and justice for an increase in the wages paid by the Government to the carriers. The average salary paid to the city carriers, varying according to their grades, from $600 to $1,200 a year, according to the figures of the department, average something over $1,100 a year; and no one who knows the character of the work, the high average character of the men, and their faithfulness, will pretend to say that they are paid too much; but when you turn to the rural carriers we find that their pay varies from $396 a year on routes less than 8 miles long to $900 per year on routes 24 miles long and over. In other words, a rural mail carrier who drives a route of from 24 to 30 miles every day of the week except Sunday received but $900. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas prevails, as I hope it will, the salaries of the rural carriers can be raised to $90 a month for the standard route of 24 miles, with an increase of $2.50 per month for each mile over 24 and a decrease of $2.50 a month for each mile under 24 traveled by the carrier over his route. In other words, the carrier on the standard route of 24 miles would receive $1,080 per year. Out of this salary he must pay for two horses, his wagon, harness, and equipment, the feed of two horses, his blacksmith bill, his repair and other bills. It will hardly be contended that in view of the greatly increased price of what the carrier must buy to feed his horses and provide a sinking fund for the payment of the wear and tear of horses and outfit as well as other considerations, that the sum proposed is anything more than reasonably just. The character of the men in this service is shown by the report of the Postmaster-General to be extremely high. Out of more than 40,000 men in the service last year about 30 were discharged for intemperance and about the same number for dishonesty. When it is remembered that these men come from every walk of life, that they handle the Government's money constantly, that they are compelled to expose themselves more or less in all sorts of weather, I submit that such a record speaks volumes in their praise.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have certainly said enough, as it seems to me, to justify my vote for this amendment, which I earnestly hope will pass, and that when this bill is perfected and finally becomes a law it will contain adequate provision for the steady increase of the rural service and for a reasonable increase in the pay of the carriers.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, every true American citizen should be proud of the postal system of the United States. With all of its defects, it is the best postal system in the world. Our admiration for our country will grow as we study our postal system, and as we learn more of its interesting history, its wonderful growth, its rapid improvement, and its present high standard of efficiency.

It does not suffer in comparison with the postal systems of other countries. Thirteen billions seven hundred and twenty millions of newspapers, magazines, and periodicals are carried through the mails of all the civilized countries in the world. Four billion seven hundred and seventy-four millions of this number—more than one-third of all such periodicals published in the world—are carried through the mails of our own country.

Our mails carry about double the number of newspapers and periodicals carried in the mails of Germany, three times the number carried in the mails of France, and four times the number carried in the mails of England.

The postal service of all the countries in the world carry annually 20,603,823,919 letters and postal cards. Six billion four hundred and sixty-five million eight hundred and fifty thousand of this number—one third of the grand total—are handled by the 325,000 intelligent American citizens employed in the postal service of the United States. Our mails carry more letters and postal cards than the combined number carried in the mails of both England and Germany, or of both Germany and France.

to its improvement, we should point out its defects. But for

No one claims perfection for our postal system. With a view one I glory in the fact that one-third of all the newspapers, magazines, and periodicals printed, and one-third of all the letters and postal cards written by the human race, are conveyed through the mails of my own country, under the protection of the Stars and Stripes.

The growth of our postal system is an index to the intellectual and material development of our country. Fifty years ago, just prior to the beginning of the civil war, this country had a population of thirty millions; we had 28,000 post-offices; our postal service had a per capita revenue of 26 cents and a per capita expenditure of 37 cents. The gross annual expenditure of the system was only $11,458,000. In 1909 we had a population of about 90,000,000; we had 60,000 post-offices; there was a per capita revenue of $2.20, a per capita expenditure of $2.49, and a grand total annual expenditure of over $221,000,000. In the last fifty years we have doubled the number of our post-offices, tripled our population, increased by sevenfold the per capita expenditure of our mail service, and increased by twenty-fold the total expenditure of our postal system.

The large increase in the expense of conducting our postal system has not been the result of extravagance or mismanagement. It is the result of extension and improvement in the service. The increase in cost comes from giving the people better postal facilities. From year to year our mails have gone out more frequently, they have been transported more rapidly, new routes have been established, the volume of business has increased, and we have introduced into the city and country a splendid system of free delivery.

Twenty-seven thousand six hundred men are employed in the free delivery of mail in our towns and cities. Forty-one thousand men are employed in the rural free delivery of mail. All told, we have an army of 70,000 persons employed in delivering mails at the homes of our people. Thirty millions of dollars are expended annually in delivering mail free in our towns and cities. Thirty-five millions are expended annually in the free delivery of mail in the country districts. We spend annually for the free delivery of mail $65,000,000, a sum equal to the total expense of our mail service twenty years ago.

In making appropriations for the Post-Office Department of our Government, in enacting laws for its regulation and control, we should bear constantly in mind that our postal system is not merely a business conducted by the Government for the mere accommodation and convenience of the people, but that it is a great institution, contributing largely to the material growth of this Republic, to the moral and intellectual advancement of its citizenship, to the welfare of our people, and to the glory of our country.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Sixty per cent of the expense of our postal system goes to the salaries of the employees of the department. I am in favor of proper economy in all branches of our National Government. But efficiency of the service is of the highest importance. The success of our mail service after all depends upon the character and efficiency of the men engaged in this service. We can not get better men by reducing the pay. I have not made a careful study of the pay received by all the men employed in the postal service, but I am fully convinced that the railway mail clerks and the rural carriers are not receiving adequate compensation.

PAY OF RURAL CARRIERS.

In my judgment the pay of the rural carriers should be substantially increased. They perform a very important service for the people. The position is one of great responsibility and requires men of unquestioned integrity. These men come in close contact with the people. The success of the service and the reputation of the department depends upon their fidelity to duty. The rural carrier is required to make quite an investment before he enters upon his work. He must maintain this investment. There is constant danger of loss. There is the wear and tear of his vehicle and equipment, and he never knows when a large portion of his annual salary must go to purchase a horse to replace the one that has died. He is often exposed to inclement weather. He must go, rain or shine, in heat or in cold. The patrons of the route expect him every day at the proper time. The records show that he seldom fails. The present schedule of salaries was fixed when the equipment of the rural carrier cost much less than it does now and when admittedly the cost of living was not nearly so high. Unless these men receive better pay, in my opinion, the service will lose many of its best men. This would cripple the service. This we can not afford to allow. The rural service must be both extended and improved. We must pay sufficient salary to induce the right kind of men to seek and remain in this service. For two important reasons the pay of the rural carriers should be increased—first, in the interest of an improved service and, second, in justice to the carriers who are not now, in my judgment, receiving pay commensurate with the service performed.

RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

The railway mail clerks are engaged in the most dangerous part of our postal service. That the people of this country may receive their mail quickly and promptly, these men engage in an employment said to be more hazardous than war. It requires a high degree of skill and intelligence to secure and fill the position satisfactorily. Before appointment to these positions a rigid mental and physical examination must be passed. While holding the position the railway mail clerk must keep up his study. He works both day and night. He is away from his home a large part of his time. He works Sundays as well as week days. In short, the skill and intelligence required of the railway mail clerk, the responsibility of his position, the character of the service performed, and the extraordinary danger of his employment, all demand that his pay should be materially increased.

HISTORY OF RURAL DELIVERY.

Free rural delivery as a part of our postal system did not come without a struggle. The first man in high authority to advocate free rural delivery of mail was the Republican Postmaster-General, Hon. John Wanamaker. Congress granted him a small appropriation to test its feasibility in connection with free delivery in villages. In his annual report to President Harrison, dated November 30, 1891 (see H. Ex. Doc., 1st sess. 52d Cong., 1891–92, vol. 13, p. 46), Mr. Wanamaker says:

> I could not commend anything to the attention of Congress with more confidence than this proposed addition to the postal facilities, first, because it is so easy; second, because it is so wide-reaching and, as it seems to me, so patriotic. But then there are a great many detailed reasons in common everyday affairs, if not in social philosophy, even why the free-delivery experiment has succeeded and ought to be extended. The rural dweller pays the same rates of postage and has the same right to the common postal facilities that the inhabitant of the city has. Often he makes long, disagreeable trips to the post-office without result. To the business man in town the extension of the free delivery would be of immense value. The country is always tributary to the city; it makes the city. The extension of the postal system will make the business man more prosperous and enterprising.
> There is a social view of this question which seems to me quite as important as any other. A great deal is said about the desertion of the farm. The regular arrival of the paper or magazine, the easier ways to correspond, the general process of sending and receiving things by mail will not only keep many of the boys and girls at home and make them contented there, but will add to their ambition and determination to make the old farm pay.

To the mind of Wanamaker the whole scheme was so easy, so patriotic, so beneficial to the people in the country and the merchants in the city. He sounded a note of confidence, of hope, of progress.

But a national election placed a Democratic administration in power. Congress, following the lead of Wanamaker, appropriated $10,000 to be used at the discretion of the Postmaster-General in testing the feasibility of free rural delivery. To the surprise, the disappointment, and disgust of the people residing in the country, Postmaster-General Hon. W. S. Bissell had no confidence in the success of the proposed free rural-delivery system and refused to use the appropriation.

In his report to the President in 1894 (see H. Ex. Doc., 2d sess. 53d Cong., 1893–94, vol. 12, p. 12) he says:

> To inaugurate a system of rural free delivery would require an appropriation of at least $20,000,000. I therefore adopt the opinion of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, that the department would not be warranted in burdening the people with such a great expense, when it can more properly, adequately, and economically meet the requirements of postal extension by widening its scope along reasonable and conservative lines and by establishing additional post-offices wherever the communities are justified in asking them.

The next Congress doubled the appropriation. But Postmaster-General Bissell refused to act. In 1894, in his report (see H. Ex. Doc., 3d sess. 53d Cong., vol. 13, p. 11) he says:

The proposed plan of rural free delivery, if adopted, would result in additional cost of about $20,000,000 for the first year; and whatever may be the future postal system of this country, I do not believe the people are yet ready or willing to involve themselves in such a large expenditure for this purpose.

In time we had a new Democratic Postmaster-General, Hon. William L. Wilson. But he proclaimed the same note of doubt, danger, and debt.

In a report (see H. Ex. Doc., vol. 13, 54th Cong., 1895–96, p. 8) Mr. Wilson says:

The amount appropriated by Congress ($20,000) to test the feasibility of establishing rural free delivery, was not expended during the last fiscal year. But the difficulties in the way of such experiments and the reasons for viewing the whole plan as impracticable are fully set forth in the report of the House committee on the post-office appropriation bill, second session Fifty-second Congress.

In 1896 the people declared that there should be a change in the administration of national affairs. By this change we were blessed with a Republican Postmaster-General, Hon. James A. Gary. He took up the refrain of progress that had been sounded by John Wanamaker.

In his first report, dated October 25, 1897 (see H. Ex. Doc., vol. 11, No. 4, Rept. Postmaster-General, 1897, 55th Cong., 2d sess.), in referring to the appropriation of $50,000 made for rural delivery, he says:

It would be difficult to point to any like expenditure of public money which has been more generously appreciated by the people, or which has conferred greater benefits in proportion to the amount expended.

He further says that the rural delivery—has unquestionably proved itself a potent factor in the attainment of what should be one of the chief aims of our Government, the granting of the best possible postal facilities to the farmer and his family.

THE SYSTEM SHOULD BE EXTENDED.

I am heartily in favor of extending the rural delivery system. In this service there must be no halting, no hesitation, no delay. The work must go on. We must give to every citizen of the United States the advantages of daily mail as rapidly as suitable public highways shall be provided. The people now understand the value of this service. If the system is not self-sustaining, this will not justify any backward step relative thereto. The people are willing to pay what is necessary to secure this service. The people who reside in the rural districts are entitled to a daily mail to place them to some extent upon an equal footing with the splendid free-delivery system furnished the inhabitants of our towns and cities. But aside from the question of justice, this system is a good investment for the Nation. It is worth far more than it costs. The Post-Office Department, as a rule, should be made self-supporting. In the main, it should be managed as a business institution. But there are exceptions to every rule. The manifest and manifold benefits of a daily mail to all our people bring the rural delivery system within the exception. We can afford to provide this system even if it is not self-supporting. If we have in view the welfare of the people of this Republic, we will continue to develop, extend, and perfect the rural delivery until all of our people enjoy its advantages and benefits.

A CHILD OF REPUBLICANISM.

The free rural-delivery system is the child of a Republican administration. For years a Democratic administration cuffed and abused this child and did everything possible to strangle it in its infancy. But in the very nick of time we inaugurated a Republican President—William McKinley. Again the free rural-delivery system was in the hands of its friends. From that day to the present hour the system has been given liberal encouragement. Appropriations have increased, new routes have been established, the number of carriers multiplied, the service improved, and its benefits extended to additional thousands of people. Our public highways, penetrating every section of our country, are lined with United States mail boxes, in which the 41,000 rural carriers deposit mail at the door of our farming population. These United States mail boxes, aggregating nearly 500,000 in number, stand along our public highways as monuments to the wisdom, patriotism, and constructive statesmanship of the Republican party.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk the following amendment and ask to have it read for information in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that a proposed amendment may be read in his time for the information of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "dollars," in line 8, page 30, the following:

"Provided, That $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used by the Postmaster-General for the establishment, experimentally, of a rural-route parcels-post delivery system, the same to be confined to parcels originating on the routes selected for experiment, and the results of such experiments to be reported to Congress by the Postmaster-General at the beginning of the next session of Congress."

Mr. WEEKS. I reserve a point of order to that amendment.

Mr. MANN. It is not offered, but only read for information.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that has just been read in my time will be offered by me at the proper time during the consideration of this paragraph. I realize that it is subject to the point of order against legislating in an appropriation bill, and, of course, if my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] makes and insists upon the point of order the House will not now have an opportunity to vote on the proposition. The amendment embraces, substantially and accurately, the recommendation of the Post-Office Department on this question, as contained in the last report of the Postmaster-General, made at the beginning of the present session of Congress, and as reenforced in the statement of Mr. De Graw, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, before the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads during the present session.

I read briefly from the report of the Postmaster-General on this question (pp. 352 and 353):

Taking the known revenue per route per month—the value of the stamps on the mail collected—from the average cost per route per month and rural delivery is costing $57.25 per route per month. The query naturally arises as to whether or not there is any way by which this service may be made to increase the postal revenue. With regard to equipment, rural carriers are required to provide an outfit suitable to carry the mail. In most instances this consists of a wagon or buggy in which from 150 to 200 pounds of mail can be easily carried. The average weight of the mail on each trip of a rural carrier is about 25 pounds. It is believed at present that in comparatively few instances does the daily weight of the mail of a carrier exceed 50 pounds.

There now exists throughout the country almost as much of a network of rural telephone lines as of rural delivery routes. In cities and towns a merchant's patrons use the telephone to order goods to be delivered. The rural population, however, except adjacent to the cities, do not have the advantage of delivery enjoyed by the urban population. The best means for the delivery of merchandise in rural districts therefore exists in the rural carriers who are daily traversing their routes. The present rate of postage on merchandise, designed to cover the cost of the carriage of parcels throughout the country, is prohibitive of the carriage of parcels from the merchant located at the distributing post-office to the patrons of rural delivery.

These conditions present an opportunity for making the Rural Delivery Service a source of greater revenue to the Government. I have, therefore, to recommend, in line with recommendations made in several previous annual reports, that the Postmaster-General be authorized to arrange, experimentally, for a limited period, for the delivery of packages on rural routes at such rates as may seem expedient, the result of the experiment to be reported to Congress as speedily as possible after the expiration of the experimental period.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word. The system of parcels-post delivery, confined to the rural routes of this country, proposed in this amendment, is one that will prove a great blessing to the rural population of our country and can do no harm to the merchants or any other class of our citizens. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], chairman of the committee, will not press the point of order against this amendment. There are now pending before the Post-Office Committee of the House many bills providing for a rural parcels post, and if these bills are not to be considered at this session, then we ought to have a chance to vote on this proposition. [Applause.]

The Post-Office Department has only asked for $5,000 to conduct this experiment, but it is my judgment that we ought to appropriate at least twenty thousand for that purpose, so that the experiment may be made general and thorough; hence the amount carried in my amendment.

Whatever may be said on the merits or demerits of a general parcels-post system with a low rate of postage, and however much division there may be both in this House and in the country about that, surely no man who considers the subject carefully can be opposed, on any just grounds, to a parcels-post system confined strictly to the rural route on which the parcel originates.

If it be opposed on the ground that the enactment of this legislation is but the entering wedge for the general parcels post by embarking the Government in the parcels-post business, my reply is that the Government is already engaged in that business, because we already have a law providing for a general parcels post, although it is true that the limit of weight of the package that can be carried is ridiculously low—4 pounds—and the rate of postage ridiculously high—16 cents a pound. If our local merchants object to the rural parcels post, I wish to point out to them that a parcels post confined strictly to the rural routes and handling no packages, save such as originate on the routes, can not possibly give them any trouble and can not possibly build up the mail-order business of the great department stores of our large cities, a competition about which they seem greatly, and I think to a large extent unnecessarily, alarmed. On the contrary, the rural parcels post will give to the local merchant a cheap and convenient delivery system that will enable him to increase and extend his trade among his country customers.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is useless to deny that after all the greatest blessings and benefits that would attend the installation of the rural parcels-post system would come to our rural population, and for one the fact that such is the case prejudices me in favor of the proposition rather than against it.

I do not believe, sir, that as a general proposition, our rural population is inclined to expect or demand special governmental favors. All that the great mass of our honest country people either hope for or desire is that they shall be given an equal chance in the battle of life and not be unnecessarily burdened by legislative privileges conferred upon others at their expense.

But, Mr. Chairman, shortsighted indeed would be the policy that did not recognize the great fact that when all is said and done the agricultural producer is the mainstay of our land, and its backbone in times of peace, its greatest wealth producer, and in times of war its sturdiest defender. There is too much tendency "townward" and "cityward" in our land already, and it seems to me to be the very wisest and truest statesmanship for the Government to do all it can, legitimately and properly to check the movement to the towns, and to turn the tide back toward the farm.

In order to do so, we ought to strive, on all occasions, both in this body and in our several state legislatures, to make rural life as attractive and convenient and pleasant as possible. The establishment of the rural delivery system, credit for which is due to one of my distinguished predecessors in this body, was a long step in that direction. Its tremendous development and wide extension, which has not yet reached its limit, prove its usefulness to the people and the incalculable blessings that it has conferred upon them. During my seven years of service in this body I have loyally stood by it and assisted in every increase and every extension of it from year to year. I am sorry to see the present administration disposed to curtail it now, and in order to prevent that and to insure the installation of the rural routes already approved, and the further development and increase of the service, I shall support the amendment of my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and as I do not believe the salary of the rural carrier is high enough, when his expenses are considered, I shall gladly vote for the amendment of my friend from Kansas [Mr. MILLER], for if his amendment prevails the department will have enough money appropriated to pay the carriers a salary of $90 per month, and I think that increase ought to be made.

But the rural delivery system is not the only convenience that the Government can and ought to provide for our rural population. Already the States and their various subdivisions are appropriating and expending large sums for the betterment of the public roads, and I hope and believe that the day is not far distant when Congress, acting under the constitutional power "to establish and maintain post-offices and post-roads"—and almost all of our public roads are now "post-roads," thanks to the extension of the rural delivery system—will make liberal appropriations to aid the state and local authorities in this great work, as recommended in the last national platform of the Democratic party.

With the continued and continuing improvement of the rural mail facilities, with the constant betterment of the public roads, with the extension and improvement of the rural telephone system, and with a rural parcels post that will give our friends in the country an easy and convenient method of having their small parcels transported to and from the towns, it seems to me that life in the country will be rendered much more attractive and much more convenient, and thus a great and wise public policy, that will make for the common good of all of our people, in the cities and towns, as well as in the country, will be promoted.

I regard the rural parcels post as a necessary, indeed, as an indispensable, part of this great programme, and I have advocated the proposition I submit to you to-day for years, both here and at home.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts insists upon it, of course the point of order will prevail against the rural parcels-post system to-day, but I wish to say to him, to the House, and to the country that, in my judgment, it will not be long before public sentiment will force the committee and this House to consider this measure on its merits and to give to our people this service.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes, not to be counted in the time devoted by the committee to this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the committee for three minutes, and that the time for taking the vote be extended to three minutes past 1. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allowed me I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to a few facts. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] only increases the appropriation over the current appropriation $640,145. That will only pay for the maintenance of about 710 routes for the year, and there are now 977 routes ready for installation. Make the calculation and you will find that I am correct.

In addition, I desire to emphasize this fact, that the amendment which I have offered increasing the appropriation $1,500,000 will only pay for the 977 routes now ready for installation and the additional routes which would be ready between now and June 30, amounting to 1,653, and will leave about $200,000 only available during the next fiscal year. So that this appropriation will only meet the current demands for routes during this fiscal year, with a small additional sum available during the ensuing fiscal year.

I notified the committee at the time this bill was under consideration that I reserved the right to dissent from their conclusions. They have now come in and agreed, the majority of the committee, to $355,145 more than is contained in the original recommendation of the committee, but still, as I said, that will only provide for the installation of a little over 700 routes, when there will be over 1,650 at the end of this present fiscal year ready for installation. Those are the facts that I wish to present to the committee. I think that a million and a half is the very least sum which should be added to the current appropriation, and that anyone who votes for a less sum, whether in reality he is opposed to the rural service or not, will, by his vote, curtail and prevent the extension of the rural service and thereby deprive many farmers of the blessings of this the most useful branch of the whole postal service. [Applause.]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that I am compelled to answer some of the statements that have been made here. First, I shall take up those made by my very, very good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], a member of the committee. As a matter of fact, he includes in his calculation a deficiency appropriation that was made last year and not included in the appropriation bill passed for the current year. That is the fact. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, we have the word of the Post-Office Department, and we can not go behind it, that there will be unexpended of the appropriation for the Rural Delivery Service at the end of this fiscal year about $250,000.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman tell us how that——

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, I must decline to yield, as I have not the time. So that there will be about $250,000 unexpended at the end of this fiscal year. Of course, that amount of money will lapse into the Treasury; but, Mr. Chairman, we have reappropriated that amount in this appropriation bill—that is, with the exception of $15,000—and that would make $245,000 that would be available for the extension of the service the next fiscal year. In addition to that, and I will not say how and after how much work, the Post-Office Committee reported in the bill under consideration the sum of $300,000. That makes $545,000 available for the extension of the Rural Delivery Service for the next fiscal year. In addition to that, the amendment offered by me provides for $500,000, altogether $1,045,000 available for the extension of the Rural Delivery Service for the next fiscal year.

Now, I want to say that if I had my way, I would probably be in favor of a larger increase, but we all have to do what is best under the circumstances, and I say, Mr. Chairman, that the Post-Office Committee has done the very best that they could do.

I have secured every cent that I conceived possible to secure for the extension of this service in this fiscal year, and no man on this floor has secured larger appropriations for this service in the past eight years than have I. So that the number of petitions does not indicate that that number of routes will be favorably reported and ready for installation, and for various reasons—lack of population, the existence of bad roads, unbridged streams, gates across highways, or other conditions result in the department rejecting 31 per cent of all petitions. After investigation about 44 per cent of the routes investigated are reported favorably. On the 30th of June last a report had been made on 1,470 cases filed in that year. Eight hundred and twenty-three, or 56 per cent, of these petitions were reported favorably. Since that time the favorable reports for increased service number about 1,000 routes ready for installation. There are at this time 756 petitions; 56 per cent of this is 392.

Since the 1st of January the number of petitions accepted for investigation is, as I am informed, 140, the greatest decrease in the service since it passed the experimental stage. We have the word of the department for it that no new departure in the matter of handling petitions for investigation is practiced. I am informed that there is now pending petitions for investigation: For Alabama, 54; Arkansas, 84; California, 22; Georgia, 42; Idaho, 25; Kansas, 37; Kentucky, 47; Louisiana, 65.

Including those favorably reported and those that are not, there are petitions on file in the Fourth Assistant's office: From Mississippi, 82; Missouri, 41; North Carolina, 77; North Dakota, 106; Oklahoma, 110; Pennsylvania, 39; South Dakota, 56; Texas, 136; Virginia, 86; Washington, 50; West Virginia, 31. There are a small number of petitions pending in practically every State. The greater part of the country available for Rural Delivery Service has been covered. The service, however, is not complete, and we should make reasonable appropriations for the extension of the rural service each year.

We find from the hearings before the Post-Office Committee that for the appropriation of the Rural Delivery Service there will be approximately $250,000 unexpended on June 30 next. The bill under consideration carries $285,000 in excess of the appropriation carried in the last post-office appropriation bill. As I have stated, this has been increased by the Post-Office Committee $300,000, and the $500,000 carried in the amendment offered by me raises the amount to $1,045,000. The practice of the department is not to put in all the routes for the fiscal year at the beginning of the year, but to pro rate the routes through the four quarters in a fiscal year. This amount of money expended in this way will install more than 2,000 rural routes for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1910.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time for the purpose of urging that the substitute offered by my colleague from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] may be agreed to. I want this appropriation increased from thirty-eight millions to forty-four millions for the purpose of having enough appropriated in this bill to provide for the payment of increased salaries to rural route carriers. [Applause.] One of the most important events of recent years was the establishment of rural free delivery. I need not argue that proposition. I want to call attention to the fact that faithful and efficient rural route carriers have made this service valuable and popular. These carriers go out upon the routes every week day in the year except legal holidays. They go in heat or cold, rain or snow, and on mud or frozen and rough roads. Their horses cost more than ever before, and feed is high. This increase which I am urging in this bill should be agreed to with a view of using it to increase the salaries of these faithful public servants to at least $1,000 a year; to do full justice it should be more. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few reasons in behalf of the increase of the appropriation for the rural free-delivery service. In the first place, it is apparent that the amount carried in the present bill is not sufficient to provide for the establishment of a number of routes that have already been surveyed and approved by the department, and can not be installed and put in operation for the simple reason that the appropriation is too small to accomplish this end.

It appears from the figures submitted to this House that there are already 977 routes that have been surveyed and approved, 679 more on file, and it is estimated that 50 per cent of these will be approved and that 900 more will be submitted by July 1; and if one-third of these (the 900) are approved, that will make 300; and this, added to the others, will make the sum of 1,616 rural routes to be approved by the department and to await installation until a sufficient amount of funds is provided for their establishment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, upon what rule of justice can we say that a portion of our great country should have rural routes and another portion, equally as deserving, should be denied them? I submit this proposition to the fair-minded judgment of this House. I can subscribe to no such selfish system as would provide the great benefits of this service to a part of our country and not to the others equally as deserving.

This is one of the most important branches of the service; in fact, none is doing so much for the advancement of our country in education, enlightenment, and material prosperity. The progress of civilization and enlightenment in every country goes hand in hand with its commerce and its facilities for communication with the world. The rural free-delivery system is no longer an experiment in the United States, but its effects and its benefits are manifest to all. Its dissemination of knowledge, news, literature, and the doings of the world, by furnishing the farmer with his daily newspaper, puts him in touch with the busy marts of trade and all the progress, sciences, arts, and so forth.

The farmer and the farmer's family not only have access to the doings in the world of progress of every kind, but he has a daily market report that enables him to know the state of the market and the full value of the products of his farm, and thus enables him to realize more fully the true value of his product. In fact, the rural carrier is doing away with remote sections of our country and bringing them to the front. The farm is more attractive because of these facilities afforded, our people are turning more to the country home and the pursuit of agriculture, and thus the value of our agricultural lands has been increased by millions.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the carriers are entitled to an increase over their present pay. Fifteen dollars per month for a standard route, in addition to their present salaries, would not be too much. There are no men in the government service that are called on to face the hardships of winter and the heat of summer as these carriers are. It requires energy, nerve, and a good constitution, and they ought to receive compensation enough, not only to support their families comfortably, but to save something to live upon when they are worn out and broken down by this strenuous service. I believe in economy in every branch of the government service, but I believe in paying government employees in proportion to the work they perform and the expense they are forced to undergo.

We hear much of the increased cost of living, but these carriers under present conditions are affected in a twofold way by the increased prices of the present day. They have not only to pay much higher for all the necessaries of life for themselves and families, but they have the increased cost of their equipment and the increased cost of its maintenance; the outlay for horses and vehicles is much greater and the cost of maintaining them is much greater. They have to pay more for the corn and oats and hay to feed their horses, and when this expense is met, as it necessarily must be, they have but a small amount left upon which to support themselves and families.

During the past few years Congress has increased many salaries of those who were receiving two and three times the amount paid these carriers upon the ground that changed conditions and the increased cost of living justified it. Now, let us not turn down these men who must bear this same increased cost of living, and, in addition to that, are compelled to undergo an expense equal in many instances to more than half their salary.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will cheerfully support the amendment, because it seeks to make an increase in the salary of rural mail carriers. We have submitted to Members here enough evidence in favor of this increase in salary to convince any reasonable-minded jury in the world. The high cost of living and the general running expenses of the rural carrier, which are ever on the increase, require this additional pay. Remember that these men have to buy their horses and feed for them, vehicles and harness, and have to support themselves and families all out of the salary they receive, and simple justice to these men calls upon us to give them this increase. They are the most faithful and the most accommodating, and yet the poorest paid, men in the mail service to-day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reply to an unfriendly newspaper criticism on my service to the cotton producer, and so forth, I desire to include in my remarks a few facts touching my work here on this line, which I will put in the RECORD.

I feel that I have accomplished some things of importance to the agricultural interests of the South; especially do I feel that I have rendered valuable service to the cotton producer.

I have done two things for the cotton producer that I point to with pride: First, in amending the law on gathering crop reports so that farmers should be called on to give this information instead of, as before, getting this information mainly from twenty-three other sources. This puts the cotton producer in a position to give the truth of the situation to the Department of Agriculture and prevent certain interested concerns from deceiving the public about crop prospects, as has been done many times, by false reports. Before I amended this law, interested concerns who wanted to "bear" or reduce the price of cotton would get in touch with some of these various classes of crop reporters, and the first thing we knew the country was treated to the information, or misinformation, that crop prospects were fine, that we had planted more cotton than ever, and would make the biggest crop ever grown. The gambling exchanges had the chance to do this sort of work without being known in the transaction. I saw this evil and I determined to remedy it.

Now, under the law as I wrote it, the producer himself makes these reports, and the frauds and misrepresentations formerly practiced on him are eliminated. The farmer is in charge of this branch of his own business, and I have received letters from many producers in the South thanking me for my work along this line.

Second, in being first to suggest a law requiring the Government to report the number of bales of cotton on hand at the cotton factories in the United States. This, in my judgment, is one of the best laws for the producer that was ever put upon the statute books of our country. It gives him the only information that he ever had on the amount of cotton on hand at the factories, and without this information he was at the mercy of those who had to have cotton.

I am the first man to bring this matter to the attention of the Committee on Agriculture, and the first one to discuss it in Congress when I introduced my bill for this purpose. Out of this effort has come the law requiring the Government to report on baled cotton as stated.

Newspapers throughout the cotton belt have complimented my services in helping to secure this legislation.

Representative SISSON, of Mississippi, who is a large cotton producer himself, told me that my work amending the law on crop reports, and requiring the Government to report the amount of baled cotton on hand at the factories, was worth millions of dollars to the cotton producers of the South.

I have introduced bills providing for sending agents into China, Japan, and other eastern countries to display and urge the use of cotton goods, and I have helped to secure appropriations for sending agents abroad for this purpose. I called, with some other southern Members of Congress, upon the Secretary of War and urged him to use cotton goods in every way possible in the army, and to request army supplies to be shipped in cotton sacks. He promised that he would do so. Every pound of cotton that we can have consumed helps the cotton producer.

In 1907 I introduced a resolution in the House, charging that the Secretary of Agriculture had overestimated the cotton crop for that year, and had injured the cotton producer by that large and unwarranted estimate. I proved before the Committee on Agriculture that the estimate was too large, and the evidence finally showed that they had overestimated it about 600,000 bales. This big estimate caused the price of cotton to go down. Since that time I have kept in close touch with the department with reference to cotton.

In 1909, when some of the New York "bear" speculators were sending out "specials" and circular letters saying that the crop would be 12,500,000 or 13,000,000 bales, I took the matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture before he made his estimate on the cotton crop in December. I acquainted him with the condition of the cotton crop throughout the South, of the poor prospects, and so forth, and I expressed the hope that there would be no ground for complaint among southern Representatives when he made up the estimate on the cotton crop. I expressed the opinion that the cotton crop would be less than 10,000,000 bales. He estimated it at 10,088,000 bales. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture in the Sixtieth Congress, I advocated and helped to secure an increase in the appropriation of money with which to fight the boll weevil.

I introduced a bill to prevent any employees in the Agricultural Department from giving out information regarding reports on the cotton crop and from making false reports, as was done by Holmes in the department a few years ago, for which he was paid money. Representative CRAIG, of Alabama, introduced a bill along the same line. These two bills were combined and unanimously reported by the Committee on Agriculture when I was a member of that committee. When we asked to call it up in the House and pass it, Representative PAYNE, of New York, the Republican floor leader, objected, and the Speaker would not permit any of us to bring it up for consideration any more during that session. We did not give up the fight, but kept on with other Members until we got practically the same provision contained in the Heflin and Craig bill in the Penal Code, and we now have a law against tampering with these reports, giving away, or selling information.

I have introduced a bill which provides for the return of the cotton tax which was unlawfully collected from the southern people just after the war. I have given out interviews showing the justice of our claim, and the newspapers of the country have published them right freely. We are working on public opinion. We have a committee of Members and Senators to present this question and urge action upon it by Congress, and I am on the House committee from Alabama.

Representative CLARK, of Florida, did me the honor to say in a speech in the House more than a year ago that I had attracted the attention of Congress and the country to the importance and justice of returning this cotton tax to our people. Two state legislatures have indorsed my bill. This cotton-tax fund is a big sum. It amounts to $60,000,000, and Alabama's share is over $10,000,000. I believe that we will succeed in getting this great Government to return this money. It will take time. A very few people still have their old cotton-tax receipts, so the bulk of this money will go to the States to be used for some public improvement, and I want to see Alabama's part go to building and improving public roads. This would give us in Alabama more than $150,000 to the county; would go a long way toward building up a splendid system of public roads. We have worked up considerable interest among the Members of Congress, and we are convincing them of the justice of our cause. We have succeeded in getting the Committee on War Claims to give us one hearing already, at which members of our committee from the Southern States presented some very important information, and, I think, made a most favorable impression for our cause. We will have more hearings and we will continue this work, and at the proper time will insist that the Committee on War Claims act on my bill and all the other bills that have been introduced for the purpose of having the Government return this cotton tax, which they now hold in violation of every legal and moral principle known to the Government. A Republican said the other day that he favored returning this cotton-tax money, but that he thought that it ought not to be pressed just now because of the condition of the Federal Treasury. We do not propose to press it for final action at this session of Congress. Of course, if we could, we would push it through now, but we have agreed upon the best course to pursue. We must educate the Members. We want them thoroughly posted on the subject. We want to convince them that we are right, and then we will ask for final action. If they will listen to the truth of our cause when that time comes, I believe that they will be like Zaccheus of old, the taxgatherer of another time and country, who, when he was made to see the injustice he had practiced upon his people in exacting unjust taxes, said, in substance, "I will restore that which I have taken fourfold to every man." We are trying to show them their duty in this matter, and we believe when they see it they will return this cotton tax to the States that have paid it.

I have toured our district urging our people to concert of action in selling cotton and to the importance of selling it sparingly, so as to keep the market keen and hungry. I knew the condition that existed in the cotton world, and early last fall, when cotton was 12 cents per pound, I made a tour of our district, declaring that the small crop justified 15 cents per pound for cotton, and I said the man who holds his cotton will get 15 cents per pound; and, as you remember, cotton did go to 15 cents. I have given close study to the cotton question, and I owe it to those who have honored me and to the people of the Southland to give them the benefit of any idea I may have or any information I may possess upon the cotton question, and this I have done and will continue to do.

I have fought gambling in farm products, especially cotton, ever since I have been here. I have contended, and still contend, that neither the New York Exchange nor any other exchange has the right to offer for sale something that it did not have and could not deliver; that the bringing of this "speculative stuff" into competition with real cotton injured the producer and deprived him of his right to require the cotton-using world to come direct to him to buy cotton; and I believe that we are going to get legislation on this line. I am hopeful, at least.

The press of the country has been kind enough to give me credit for helping to bring about the strong sentiment that now exists against gambling in cotton. I agree with Senator John T. Morgan, when he said:

> The day will come when the producer will fix the price of cotton at his own door.

And if we can destroy the gambling exchanges, that do not handle real cotton, but deal only in paper contracts and settle the difference in money, the producer will be benefited, and we will have spot-cotton exchanges all over the South. I have studied the cotton question and I have never lost an opportunity to advance the interest of those who produce cotton with which to clothe the world. So long as I have the honor to represent my people in the Congress of the United States, this great industry of the South will have the best service that I am capable of rendering.

I desire to include an editorial on cotton from the Philadelphia Evening Item:

COTTON IS KING.

In a really impressive and most forceful speech on this head in Congress, Congressman J. THOMAS HEFLIN, of Alabama, said dressmakers and tailors have at last learned how to make up cotton goods in the most fascinating and attractive way.

"The cotton suit I wore here last summer, and those worn by other Members of Congress, looked better than the flannel suits worn by other gentlemen here, and they did not cost one-third as much.

"They were cooler and more comfortable every way. I have advocated it, and I believe the day will come when the southern people will wear cotton almost exclusively from April to September. By this means the South will consume nearly 4,000,000 bales more than is now consumed.

"For spring and summer cotton is the coolest and cheapest wearing apparel in the world, and our people are at last beginning to realize the value of patronizing home industry."

Mr. HEFLIN is right. Heretofore Americans have not realized, generally speaking, the real worth of cotton for warm-weather wear and for cold-weather underclothing, either, when it is manufactured in proper shape. We here in the North wear too much wool in summer for good health.

There is an untold mint in this business now only partly developed, because there is something about cotton that makes it the best material for many uses the same cost will reach in any other farm product.

On this head we have had our attention drawn to certain processes in the manufacture of cotton which makes its surface hard, smooth, and glossy, and the full equal of linen in its powers of keeping or wearing clean.

All that is due to the treatment of raw cotton when woven into fabrics.

We were shown more: Cotton can be woven as fine as silk and look like silk. Every day is bringing forth new inventive processes which are marvels in their way in opening up new uses for cotton in all lines of clothing, trimmings, and decorations.

We have been shown sample boots and shoes made entirely of cotton, which almost startled us with the vast market possibilities which could be created in their sale.

They were better than leather, far handsomer, and wore well, and those shoes cost less than half, yes, a good deal less than half, the cost of a fair-grade leather shoe.

They felt better on the feet, tended to heat the feet less feverishly, so we were prone to exclaim that hides for shoes have seen their day.

As Mr. HEFLIN says, civilized men the world over are coming to know that cotton is the healthiest and most comfortable fabric that can be worn next the skin.

The man who suffers from colds and grip in the winter by reason of wearing woolens next the skin "can obtain health and happiness by putting on the South's sensible garment made of cotton."

Five hundred thousand bales of cotton a year are now used for making wheels for automobiles.

Formerly the drawback to cotton fabrics was the difficulty in getting it to hold good, permanent dyes. Now, day by day, that drawback is being overcome. It is being dyed as well as the best wool, and equally lasting or durable without fading in the sun. Many chemists are now at work in this field, for heretofore it has been the chief drawback in mixing with good wool.

All of which appeals to the inventors and chemists in our cotton factories.

Wool, pure or alone, tends to feverishly heat the body of man. Cotton cools.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as it comes from the committee, carries $37,645,000 for the Rural Delivery Service. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], if adopted, will add $500,000 to this amount. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], if adopted, will add $1,300,000 to the amount carried in the bill. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] proposes to increase the original amount by more than $7,000,000. Mr. Chairman, I shall gladly support the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina for the reason that it is the first proposition we shall vote upon. After that I shall do everything in my power to have this committee agree to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The only way to extend this service and increase the salaries of rural carriers is to adopt this substitute. Gentlemen who are vigorously opposing this substitute will offer at the end of this paragraph propositions to increase the salaries of rural carriers, when they know every single one of them will go out on points of order. If we give them the $45,000,000—the proposition for which I contend—is there a man in this House who doubts for a moment that this service will not only be extended, but that salaries will be increased?

Mr. Chairman, the American Congress has done nothing better in the last quarter of a century than the establishment of this Rural Delivery Service. I can understand how many of you gentlemen who were born and reared in large cities, where your mail is shot through tubes to substations and delivered at your doors and offices several times a day, can fail to appreciate this work. But forget your local surroundings for a moment and think of the man who lives 5, 10, and even 15 miles from a post-office. That man wants to be in touch with the world and yet it is impossible for him to get his daily mail without unreasonable trouble and expense. That same man, Mr. Chairman, has a family, and how it burdens his heart to see them grow up in ignorance. The result is that he has been leaving his farm and moving to some near-by town where he can get his daily mail.

Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen of this House will pardon a somewhat personal reference; but how vividly I recall the days of my boyhood and young manhood. We lived on a farm, and God grant that I may go back there. I speak modestly when I say my father, the best man I ever saw, was worth more money than I can ever hope to own. Yet we were 11 miles from a post-office. In busy seasons it was unreasonable to get mail oftener than once a week. If a man from the community went to town, he brought mail for his near neighbors. How ridiculous to take daily papers and have seven of them piled on your desk at one time.

Now, the Almighty in his infinite wisdom has directed the American Congress to inaugurate this service, and each morning the mail is put in a box at that door.

Knowing the value of this service as I do, it is inconceivable to my mind how you gentlemen can refuse to appropriate the paltry sum of $7,000,000 for this great work when you can appropriate in ten minutes ten times this amount for something of at least questionable benefit.

Gentlemen, I spoke a few moments ago of the tendency of people in my section to leave their farms and move to town. When I came to Congress the Sixth Congressional District of South Carolina, the best and largest in the State, had 39 rural routes. So many good men, who were leaders in educational affairs, pillars in their churches, and real blessings to their communities, were leaving their farms and moving to town that the conditions were alarming.

Weak, as I am, Mr. Chairman, limited in influence here, as you all know, I offered a silent prayer that I might be able to do something to relieve this alarming condition. I rejoice to say that, with the aid of one of the best and strongest men in the American Congress, my warm friend of years, my colleague [Mr. FINLEY], I have been able to put in more than a hundred routes in my district. God only can measure the blessings resulting from this.

Mr. Chairman, the country is the place to raise boys. It is surprising to know the number of country-grown lads who become the leading figures in every great city in this Union. Gentlemen, in every college in every city you will find a well-equipped gymnasium. This is but an effort to furnish the exercise necessary to the development of the physical man which every country boy gets when he is walking 3 miles to school, feeding the hogs, milking the cows, chopping wood, or doing the common chores around the home.

Can you censure me for standing here and doing everything in my power to persuade you Members of the American Congress to extend this great work which means so much for so many people?

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word as to the increase of salaries of rural carriers. We have heard so much and read so much about the increased cost of living that I can not understand how any man can oppose this. Right here I desire to insert a few letters bearing directly upon this subject:

WINTERSET, IOWA, January 19, 1910.

W. D. BROWN.

DEAR BROTHER: I am inclosing my report to you to-day. My corn and hay I bought in a bunch, so I just give an average per month.

Hay I got for $8.50 per ton; now it is worth from $13 to $18 per ton. That is what I will have to pay for the next I buy.

When my horse died, I told some of my patrons I was ready now to resign and quit. They did not want me to, so they went to work and raised $100.15 and gave it to me. This makes me feel as if I owed it to my patrons to hold on a while longer; but if a change does not come soon, I will have to quit and go at something else, so I can make a living for my family of four.

I began carrying mail four years last June; would be out of it now if it was not for friends.

If I chewed, smoked, and drank a little I don't know where I would be, but I am a teetotaler in this line.

Thanking you for your efforts for the carriers, and wishing you much success in the future, I am,

Fraternally, yours, D. W. KRELL,
President Madison Co. R. L. C. A.

P. S.—I had a horse go lame year before last; could do nothing for him; got $5 for him; this makes two for me.

EDITOR RURAL FREE DELIVERY NEWS:

I certainly do appreciate more than I can express the efforts you are making for the betterment of the rural carriers. I would be glad to fill out the blank in the News and forward to you, but I have kept no account of expenses. However, it is costing about 50 cents per day to feed one horse, which would make about $35 per month for feed and repairs for two horses.

I have been in the service seven years and nearly seven months. I have not by several hundred dollars made expenses, and it is growing worse all the time, as the cost of living has doubled since I went into the service. I know some one would say, Why don't you quit? Simply because I went into it on account of my health, and it has improved a great deal. I had been in business for about twenty years and my health was so bad that I was forced to quit, so there is nothing else that I can do.

I do hope that Congress will do something for us. One hundred dollars would help us greatly, but we ought to have $300 at least to live decently.

I have not time to write more, and I am not writing for publication, but for your information. Every word I have written can be substantiated by the best people here.

Thanking you again for your efforts in our behalf and wishing for you abundant success, I am,

Your sincere friend, D. B. MITCHELL.

RURAL FREE DELIVERY NEWS,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: My expense account may look excessive, but I would take oath that it is not any less, but probably more.

One carrier that has resigned here lost two horses last year. His report would open some of their eyes to what the carriers have to stand on $75 a month, if he was only here to send it in.

Thanking you for calling my attention to this matter, I remain,

Yours, very truly,

HERBERT H. MONKMAN,
Rural Letter Carrier No. 1.

My route is No. 2, from Mullins, State of South Carolina; Congressional District, Sixth; name of Representative, Hon. J. E. ELLERBE.

W. F. SMITH, Rural Carrier.

Two of these letters are from carriers in my district. I believe everything they say.

Gentlemen, when the sun shines hot, and in the language of my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], You can see the heat waves sizzling in the atmosphere;" when the man behind the plow leads his tired mule into the shade and slakes his thirst with deep draughts from the old oaken bucket; when even the negro, product of the Tropics, drops his hoe from exhaustion, we look down the glaring road and cuss the rural carrier for being late. And when the icy breath of winter has frozen the streams; when the drifted snow piles high in the deserted roads; when the hickory logs roar in the chimney and the children count their dollars in the sparks; when we drive the shivering cattle into comfortable sheds lest they freeze to death, we greet the carrier's cheery call often with a muttered complaint because we have had to wait an hour or two for our favorite paper. Ah, gentlemen, it takes grit and grace to be a rural carrier, and I tell you now it is going to take greenbacks as well if we wish to have men fill these places who will be a credit to Uncle Sam.

There was a young maid from Illaria,
Who was wooed by a brave rural carrier,
But she said we can't live
On the pay that they give,
And so the poor chap couldn't marry her.

But now the young girl of Illaria
Asks us to remove this sad barrier.
She says one thousand per Sounds all right to her,
And if he gets that he can marry her.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the committee understand exactly what these amendments and substitutes mean. The department made these recommendations, to continue the service on 41,110 routes, which is the number now in operation, $35,683,480; for readjustment and extensions of existing service as it becomes imperative, $249,000; to pay substitutes for carriers on vacations, $1,380,000; to pay clerks in charge of stations, $20,000; to pay tolls, and so forth, $12,000; or $37,345,000. This committee should understand that that maintains the service as it is to-day, paying carriers exactly what has been paid in the past and providing substitutes and everybody else connected with the service, exactly as has been done during the past year. The Post-Office Committee recommended that $300,000 should be added to the amount appropriated for extensions of service, and as of this amount which I have just read $249,520 was available for extensions, there will be a total of $549,520 available for that purpose. The committee amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] adds $505,000 more, so that there will be available for extensions $1,054,520 for the year 1911. Now, the amount provided for extensions during the last three years has been as follows: For the year 1908, $1,070,000; for the year 1909, $503,000; for the year 1910, $660,000.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does that enable an increase of the carriers' salaries?

Mr. WEEKS. I am talking about extensions entirely.

Mr. FINLEY. Will not this amount for extensions, $1,054,000, put in over 2,000 routes during the next fiscal year?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, the officer in the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General's office who has charge of this service stated that the $549,000 provided would put in from 1,000 to 1,200 routes. If that is correct, the amount now provided would put in in the neighborhood of 2,000 routes.

Mr. FASSETT. Do I understand that not one dollar of this $6,000,000 increase proposed by the gentleman from Kansas will be available to increase the wages of a single carrier?

Mr. WEEKS. That is correct.

Mr. SHEPPARD. We will explain how it will be.

Mr. WEEKS. Now we are maintaining the service as it is, and in providing $1,050,000 for extensions we are making more available than has been provided on an average in the past three years for that purpose. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, can we have the different amendments read?

The CHAIRMAN. The question comes first upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 6 and 7, page 30, strike out the words "thirty-seven million six hundred and forty-five thousand dollars" and insert "thirty-eight million eight hundred and sixty thousand dollars."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SMALL) there were—ayes 127, noes 102.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, tellers.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina prevails, will the House then vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas?

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute has not yet been presented to the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, we will have a vote on the other proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. After the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], the question will then come on the substitute. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The tellers (Mr. WEEKS and Mr. SMALL) reported that there were—ayes 153, noes 90.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes upon the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a good many of us do not understand this voting. The first vote was taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The first vote was taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL]——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That has already been taken.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). So that the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] has been perfected. Now the question is on perfecting the substitute, and then the question will come on the substitute for the amendment. The question now comes on the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proposed amount in the substitute, $44,773,736, and insert $38,150,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the Clerk to report the figures of the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Thirty-eight million eight hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the figures of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Forty-four million seven hundred and seventy-three thousand seven hundred and thirty-six dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 129.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 123, noes 131.

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question now comes on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "dollars," in line 8, page 30, the following:

"Provided, That $20,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used by the Postmaster-General for the establishment, experimentally, of a rural route parcels-post delivery system, the same to be confined to parcels originating on the routes selected for experiment, and the results of such experiments to be reported to Congress by the Postmaster-General at the beginning of the next session of Congress."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposes legislation, and is in violation of Rule XXI, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 8, after the word "dollars," add: "Provided, That hereafter rural letter carriers on maximum routes shall receive $1,080 per year and on shorter routes a proportional increase on salaries now received."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The salaries of the rural carriers are fixed by statutory law. This would be a change of existing law and contrary to our rules. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert after the word "substations," in line 10, on page 30, the following:

"Provided further, That service on any rural free-delivery route shall not be discontinued, or remain hereafter discontinued, because of any obstruction across said route erected or maintained in accordance with the laws of the State in which said route is situated, unless said obstruction shall prevent the carrier on said route from delivering the mail in his charge within the schedule time prescribed by the Post-Office Department."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, that is a limitation upon the appropriation, and I do not think the point of order would lie against it at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment does not seem to the Chair to refer to the appropriation. It is clearly legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. POU. I want to ask if the Chair ruled that amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled that the amendment offered by the gentleman is not a limitation upon the appropriation; that it is an affirmative provision of law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 3 of an act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, approved March 1, 1899, is hereby repealed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. COUDREY. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That after June 30, 1911, mail shall not be delivered by city carriers at residences, except where mail receptacles suitable for the receipt of mail are provided at the door or entrance.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the paragraph. The point of order is sustained on the ground that the amendment proposes legislation.

The Clerk read as follows:

So much of the act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1881, as relates to the advertisements of mail lettings is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail lettings of each State and Territory to be conspicuously posted in each post-office named in said advertisement for at least sixty days before the time of such general lettings, and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail lettings."

Mr. DODDS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 2, on page 32, insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"That from and after the passage of this act all periodical publications issued from a known place of publication at stated intervals, and as frequently as four times a year, by or under the auspices of a benevolent or fraternal society or order organized under the lodge system and having a bona fide membership of not less than 1,000 persons, or by a regularly incorporated institution of learning, or by or under the auspices of a trades union, and all publications of strictly professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins issued by state boards of health, shall be admitted to the mails as second-class matter, and the postage thereon shall be the same as on other second-class matter and no more: Provided, however, That such matter shall be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to prevent such periodical publications from containing or carrying advertising matter, whether such matter pertains to such benevolent and fraternal societies and orders and institutions of learning and trades unions, or other persons, institutions, or concerns; it being one of the purposes of this act to give to such publications the same rights and privileges as to being admitted to the mails as second-class matter as those given to and possessed by all other periodical publications and newspapers admitted to the mails as second-class matter, and that all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. DODDS. I realize that the amendment presents new legislation, and is subject to a point of order if the gentleman insists upon making it; however, a special bill for the same purpose is now before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I hope to have it reported to the House in the near future, in case this amendment be not allowed.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to use the time of the committee in the consideration of this matter now; but I desire to have printed in the RECORD the argument of Mr. Stephen D. Williams, of Detroit, Mich., chairman of the special committee of the National Fraternal Press Association, a branch of the National Fraternal Congress.

The argument of Mr. Williams, to which I refer, is as follows:

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

There are two acts governing the postal privileges of periodicals, one passed in 1879 and the other in 1894, and are as follows:

ACT OF 1879.

SEC. 428. The conditions upon which a publication shall be admitted to the second class are as follows:

First. It must regularly be issued at stated intervals, as frequently as four times a year, and bear a date of issue, and numbered consecutively.

Second. It must be issued from a known office of publication.

Third. It must be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications.

Fourth. It must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and having a legitimate list of subscribers: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to admit to the second-class rate regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for circulation at nominal rates.

ACT OF 1894.

SEC. 429. All periodical publications issued from a known place of publication at stated intervals and as frequently as four times a year, by or under the auspices of a benevolent or fraternal society or order organized under the lodge system and having a bona fide membership of not less than 1,000 persons, or by a regularly incorporated institution of learning, or by or under the auspices of a trades union, and all publications of strictly professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins issued by the state boards of health, shall be admitted to the mails as second-class matter, and the postage thereon shall be the same as on other second-class matter and no more: Provided further, That such matter shall be originated and published to further the objects and purposes of such society, order, trades union, or institution of learning, and shall be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications.

There are, in round numbers, about 200 publications published as the official organs of fraternal societies, many of which were admitted to the mails as second-class matter under the act of 1879, several years before the passage of the act of 1894, and have maintained their entry under that act since that time. Many of the more recent publications have been entered under the act of 1894.

These papers enjoyed the privileges of the mails quite undisturbed until 1903, when the question arose as to their right of entry under the act of 1879. It was claimed by certain ones that they did not have such a "legitimate list of subscribers" as would entitle them to entry under that act; that to have such a list they must have paid subscriptions the same as newspapers are supposed to have. The matter was taken up with Mr. Madden, then Third Assistant Postmaster-General, and a ruling was made by that officer to the effect that if the fraternal society would provide in its by-laws for the setting aside of a definite portion of the annual per capita tax or dues of each member, so that each one would be required to pay a certain sum for the paper, with his knowledge and consent, it would be regarded as a reasonable requirement of the law and would entitle them to remain entered under the said law of 1879. Accordingly, all of the orders publishing an official organ adopted by-laws similar to the following, taken from one of the oldest of these societies:

"Each member shall pay an annual per capita tax of $1.20, of which 10 cents shall be for the payment of a copy of the official organ."

The Modern Woodmen of America adopted such a by-law, and, in addition, under the direction of Mr. Madden, required all its new members to sign the following subscription:

"I direct that of official paper, the Modern Woodman, be mailed me at the address given below until I shall notify the head clerk to change the same, and that the subscription price thereof be paid from my yearly per capita tax."

Acting upon this ruling and advice of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, and, believing the matter settled for good, the Modern Woodman purchased a printing plant at an expense of about $50,000 or more, and started printing its own paper, expecting that its advertising would assist it in paying the enormous expenses of maintaining such a plant. The purchase of this plant was further desired because there were not adequate facilities at Rock Island for the printing and mailing of the 1,000,000 copies issued each month. It thought that it could give better service to its members and less trouble to the postal department by personally handling its own mailing list under its own supervision. Accordingly, it sought to change its post-office to Rock Island and maintain its former entry and privileges under the act of 1879. However, an interested party made complaint against it to the post-office officials, and after a hearing was given it, a ruling was made to the effect that it had no right to be entered under the act of 1879; that Mr. Madden's ruling was wrong; that it would have to reenter under the act of 1894, and that when so entered it would have no right to carry advertising in its columns, as the Assistant Attorney-General had ruled that the said act of 1894 did not carry with it such right. (Circular V, Classification Division.) Mr. Madden's ruling had taken into consideration the said Circular V.

At that time the said Modern Woodman was running certain departments, calculated to be of benefit and interest to its members, such as fashion plates, plans for beautiful homes, and a review of such books as the editor thereof thought might be helpful to the members. The department was asked to rule upon that matter also, and accordingly sent the following letter:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 28, 1903.

Mr. F. O. VAN GALDER,
Editor the Modern Woodman,
Rock Island, Ill.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your communication of the 21st instant, stating that application had been made for readmission of the Modern Woodman to the second class of mail matter under the act of July 16, 1894, and asking if certain advertisements heretofore carried in the columns of that publication, viz, books mentioned in column entitled "Literary notes," fashions mentioned in "Modern fashion talks," plans for beautiful homes, rings and emblems of the society sold by the supply department of the society, are objectionable under the opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, dated January 24, 1901, you are advised that the advertisement relating to rings and emblems of the society is the only one which can be regarded as furthering the objects and purposes of the order. (See inclosed copy of Circular V.)

Respectfully,

A. L. LAWSHE,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

The last two paragraphs of the department pertaining to "Beautiful homes" read as follows:

"If any of our readers who intend to build will send us a rough sketch of what they want, we would be pleased to work it into shape for them and send them a floor plan drawn to scale, without charge.

"Twentieth Century Cottages is a book which illustrates a number of views and complete floor plans of modern houses of moderate cost. It will be sent post paid to any of our readers upon receipt of 25 cents. Address all letters to M. W. of A., Home Building Department, Rock Island, Ill."

[Cut of house.]

No. 176.—A pretty design for a pleasant home.

This cut, with the rest of the article, was ruled out of the Modern Woodman.

This was one of the departments ruled out by the Post-Office Department.

A number of other fraternal papers have been ordered to reenter under the act of 1894, although they have been entered under the act of 1879 for many years and have arranged the conduct of their affairs accordingly.

ARGUMENTS FOR THE BILL.

The claims of the proponents of the measure rest upon the broad principle of equal justice for all and discrimination against none.

The Federal Constitution gives Congress the power to establish post-roads and post-offices and to provide for the carrying of mail as an incident thereto. The discussion of the delegates which framed it and the postal laws which were first enacted all show conclusively that the primary purpose of all this legislation was to promote the public welfare. The only reason why any publication should be carried by the mails is that it is a public benefactor. That principle is the basis for our entire postal system and is fundamental. No publication or periodical of whatever character should be allowed to circulate through the mails which can not stand that classification, and any publication which can stand that classification should be allowed equal privileges with every other and all other publications. The law as it now stands will not permit it, and it should be amended so as to end all unjust discrimination.

Do the fraternal publications come within this classification? They are published in the interest of the orders which they represent.

The objects and purposes of these societies are set forth in the following provisions, taken from the by-laws of one of the oldest of these orders, and similar provisions can be found in all of them. This is one of the societies which has recently been proscribed:

OBJECTS OF THE ORDER.

SEC. 2. To unite fraternally all male white persons of sound bodily health and good moral character who are socially acceptable, between 18 and 70 years of age, and to provide for life and disability benefits to those between the ages of 18 and 51 years.

SEC. 3. To give all moral and material aid in its power to its members and those dependent upon them.

SEC. 4. To educate all its members socially, morally, and intellectually.

SEC. 5. To relieve sick and disabled members, to care for the living, and bury the dead.

SEC. 6. To establish a benefit fund or funds from which, on satisfactory evidence of the death of a benefit member of the order who has complied with all its lawful requirements, a stipulated amount shall be paid to the beneficiary of such member, or as he shall direct and as the laws of the order shall provide, and to establish a disability benefit fund from which, upon the total and permanent disability of a benefit member in good standing, either as the result of disease, accident, or old age, such sum of money and in such manner as may be fixed in the laws of the order: Provided, That the period of life at which the payment of benefits for disability on account of old age shall not be under 70 years.

SEC. 7. To establish a fund for the payment of sick, accident, and funeral benefits.

Can there be any doubt about their promoting the general welfare when they do the things enumerated in the by-laws quoted?

The following is what President Taft said about them in his letter to the National Fraternal Congress, in session at Put in Bay, in August, 1908:

HOT SPRINGS, VA., August 11, 1908.

MY DEAR SIR: It is with regret that I decline your renewed invitation to attend the annual meeting of the National Fraternal Congress, for I would like much to offer personally a word of encouragement to those who have in charge the very important interests of the many thousands of members of fraternal associations affiliated in the congress. I realize the power which these associations exercise for the good of the members and their protection in sickness and the protection at their death of those depending upon them. I sincerely hope that the efforts of all may be exerted in perfecting and perpetuating a system by which the two commendable purposes of all such societies may be fully achieved.

I appreciate the great courtesy of your renewed invitation, and am very sorry that circumstances prevent my acceptance.

Faithfully, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

C. A. GOWER,
Secretary National Fraternal Congress, Lansing, Mich.

If these fraternal societies do all the President says they do, do they not in a marked degree "promote the general welfare?" These fraternal papers are necessary to the well-being of these benevolent institutions, and the full "purposes of all such societies" can not be "fully achieved" without them.

There are more than 7,000,000 men and women in this country belonging to these fraternal beneficial orders, representing fully 28,000,000 of interested people, with more than 103,000 subordinate lodges or branches, and carrying fully $8,000,000,000 of life and accident insurance and disability benefits. They have paid to the widows, orphans, and dependents of deceased members, together with disability benefits to disabled members, more than $1,200,000,000. Some of these orders are supporting at large expense great hospitals for the cure of consumption and other dread diseases. Some of them support homes for aged members and helpless children, beds in hospitals for the sick and disabled.

Can there be any doubt about their being public benefactors and among the most worthy of all the benevolent institutions in the whole world? Can there be any sound or wholesome reason why they should be discriminated against in the matter of postal rates and privileges?

NONCOMMERCIAL IN CHARACTER.

These orders are noncommercial in character. They are incorporated under the fraternal acts of the several States. No certificates of stock are issued, as they are purely mutual concerns. No dividends are ever declared, for they are run absolutely at cost. They are not profit-making institutions, but wholly benevolent in character. Are not such institutions at least entitled to as much consideration at the hands of a government as those concerns which are run absolutely and wholly for profit and gain to the few persons interested in them?

The fraternal society is an open corporation. Any white person of wholesome character can join them as a social member; and the same thing is true of colored societies. Membership is unrestricted in this respect, except where self-respect requires it in the interest of morality and decency. Furthermore, "benefit" membership is limited only by certain laws of mortality in addition to those governing social membership. Thus is membership limited only by such restrictions as are necessary to carry out the patriotic and benevolent purpose of those institutions.

On the other hand, the close corporation, issuing stock to its members, is limited in its membership (1) by the amount of its stock, and (2) by the number of people who are financially able to purchase it. The first purpose of a fraternal corporation is to promote the general welfare, financial gain being a mere incident to its existence. The close, commercial corporation is instituted for the direct purpose of making money for its stockholders, the public welfare being a mere incident to its operation. The conditions are completely reversed.

It is not the purpose of this brief to lessen the importance of or belittle the commercial press of the country. Fraternalists believe in the usefulness of the press of the land and respect it highly. But which should be entitled to the first consideration of the Government, the fraternal press, whose highest duty it is to promote the general welfare, or the commercial press, which makes it a mere incident?

But the fraternal press seeks no favors. It simply asks equal rights and privileges, and nothing more. It merely asks the passage of the measure which it offers, and which is necessary to protect it against the discrimination which has grown out of the administration of the postal laws on the statutes of the country. Many of the leading newspapers of the land are owned and controlled by close corporations, operated for the profit and gain of the stockholders who own them. Is the stockholder of a close corporation entitled to any rights or privileges which a member of a fraternal corporation is not? If so, why?

PASSAGE OF THE BILL NECESSARY TO ESTABLISH JUSTICE.

In attempting to administer the law as it now stands, gross injustice has arisen. This must always be true where fundamental principles are forgotten. If allowed to continue it can only result in bringing the most helpful of all the departments of Government into disfavor.

In explanation of this it may be well to call attention to the fact that the ruling of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, above referred to, was made more than a year ago, and for a whole year some of the most worthy of the fraternal papers have been denied the full privileges of the mails. Yet, upon investigation, it is found that the following-named periodicals are admitted to the full rights of the mails, and have been during all that time, although their circulation is maintained, in substance and in fact, the same as that of the Modern Woodman, which was deprived of its home department as above set forth: The Journal of the Indiana State Medical Association, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Journal of the South Carolina Medical Association, Florence, S. C.; the Journal of the Medical Society of New Jersey, Orange, N. J.; Iowa Medical Journal, Des Moines, Iowa; the Journal of the Arkansas Medical Society, Little Rock, Ark.; Western Medical Review, Omaha, Nebr.; the Journal of the Oklahoma State Medical Association, Muskogee, Okla.; Kentucky Medical Journal, Bowling Green, Ky.; California State Journal of Medicine, San Francisco, Cal.; the Journal of the American Medical Association, Chicago, Ill.

These facts are not given to injure the publications named, for they are worthy periodicals, but for the sole object of putting an end to a system which, if continued, is sure to bring so beneficent a department as our Post-Office into disrepute.

All of these publishers are required to file a copy of each issue of their publications in the Library of Congress, with which the librarian is familiar, and it is not an impossible task to ascertain who are violating the rules and regulations of the department, and thus require universal obedience. The fraternal publications will be satisfied with such requirements.

METHODS OF CIRCULATION.

Some arguments have been made against the fraternal publication because its circulation was obtained somewhat differently from that of the average newspaper. The Acting Third Assistant Postmaster-General, in a letter written to Congressman LEVER, concerning the South Carolina Pythian, used the following language:

"It is manifestly an injustice to publishers competing in the same or similar field, and having papers which would be patronized by the members of an organization, to be compelled to secure and maintain a list of subscribers based on the drawing power of the paper as such, whereas the competing organization papers' list of subscribers is composed of members, who were drafted in under a by-law of the organization and receive the paper as one of the benefits of membership, and not on account of voluntary subscription. Publishers of other papers have entered complaints asserting that people will not pay for that which they can receive free."

In reply to this statement we would ask to whom is it "manifestly an injustice" that fraternal beneficial societies, organized, not for profit and gain, but to protect the widow and orphan and care for those dependent members who are overtaken by misfortune, whose first duty is to promote the general welfare of the country, should have the same and equal privilege as those close corporations, owning and publishing newspapers, not for the benefit of widows and orphans, nor to promote the general welfare, except as a mere incident, but for the personal profit and gain of the few stockholders who own them? To whom is it "manifestly an injustice?"

Again, we believe the Acting Third Assistant Postmaster-General is mistaken in his statement that the members of fraternal societies are "drafted" into those organizations. No institution on the face of the earth is more free from coercion or "draft."

The act of joining one of these orders is absolutely voluntary. How could it be otherwise? Furthermore, there is unrestricted competition in this field. There are more than two hundred of these benevolent orders in the United States. Can not a man find a free choice among that number? They all publish by-laws and a copy is given to every member, so that he may know just what his obligations and benefits are. To him it is all an open book and we challenge the assertion that anybody is "drafted" into these orders. The fraternal paper is paid for out of each annual contribution to the society, a fact known to all members when they join.

Compare this method of obtaining a circulation with that employed by some newspapers, and it will not be found to the disadvantage of the fraternal publication. We say this without desire to injure, in any way whatsoever, the newspaper. Discrimination has compelled us to issue a statement of facts in our own defense.

To be specific, we quote the following from the Pittsburg Leader, of Pittsburg, Pa., of January 8, 1910, first page:

"SUNDAY COUPON GIVES TEN VOTES—PURCHASE OF COUPONS IN BULK WILL NOT BE PERMITTED—A CHANCE FOR ALL.

"Ten votes will be represented by the coupon to be printed in the Sunday Leader to-morrow for the free trip to the Jeffries-Johnson fight offered by the Leader.

"The coupon will be printed on page 2 to-morrow and, as previously announced, all Sunday coupons will be good for ten votes.

"Save your coupons and have your friends save for you, but pay particular attention to the fact that coupons purchased in bulk from news agents or newsdealers will be thrown out. Under no circumstances will such coupons be counted."

Is not a membership in a fraternal order as legitimate a way to obtain a circulation to a periodical as a trip to a prize fight? Is the free choice of joining a benevolent society any more of a "draft" than an offer of a ticket to a prize fight, three thousand miles away, between a white man and a colored man, in which there is a prize of $100,000 going to the one who shall knock the other senseless for the period of ten seconds? To whom is benevolent competition "manifestly an injustice?"

This is not an unfair comparison, for every sort of scheme is resorted to by some newspapers to increase and maintain their circulation, from a trip to a prize fight to a cheap chromo.

The benevolent orders have never taken, and do not now take the position that such competition is "manifestly an injustice." They can take care of the widow and orphan in spite of it. All they ask is an equal opportunity with all competitors in so doing.

In answer to the last proposition, that "people will not pay for that which they can receive free," we would say that it appears to us that the public mail service should not be commercialized and left with any individual to say who shall make money out of it and who shall not. The fraternal paper is not furnished "free" to the members, for that would imply a gift. Who gives a paper to a member? The facts are, each member pays for his own paper the same cost as all other members, the actual cost price of the same. What law, either of public policy or of the statute, does that violate? What basis is there for the statement that because a mutual society can and does furnish a thing to its members at cost, it is therefore "free?" Must the right to use the public mails depend upon the principle of profit and gain? Should a man be allowed to use the mails because he is a member of a close corporation and makes money out of it, and at the same time his neighbor denied the right because he is a member of a benevolent corporation and does not make money out of it? Is our postal system to be hereafter constructed and operated along that line? We trust not.

In this connection, and right here, we wish to and do call the attention of the members of Congress to a single comparison which should serve as an illustration of the injustice of the situation. We have asked the Ladies of the Maccabees of the World to mail a copy of their official organ, the Ladies' Review, to every Member of Congress, and we respectfully request each one to compare the same with the Police Gazette, which may be found in nearly every shop and news stand, for the purpose of judging, if needed, which of the two conduces most to the public welfare. The Police Gazette has the full privilege of the mail service, while the Ladies' Review is liable to be excluded from the mails at any time the ruling of the Post-Office Department is applied to it, or compelled to lose its privileges under the act of 1879.

THE QUESTION OF THE VOLUME OF ADVERTISING AND THE HAUL.

As to the question of the volume of advertising carried we hold that there is less of it in the fraternal paper, in proportion to its size, than in the newspapers. Take any issue of the fraternal papers and it will serve equally well. Those that have not yet been refused the right to carry advertising will show that not more than one-sixth of their space is devoted to advertising. A large part of them carry no advertising at all except their "home departments." Their advertising is of the "mail order" character which stimulate letter writing on first-class mail business and is a large profit to the Postal Department. So far as cost to the mail service is concerned, it will be found a benefit instead of a deficit.

But the hurtful feature of this situation is that it not only deprives the fraternal paper of the right to carry advertising in its columns to aid in lessening its expenses to the order, but it deprives it of the right to maintain its home department and to use its columns freely to do such work as it desires to assist its members individually. Many times a member in hard circumstances desires to sell his farm or other property. It is desirable to insert an advertisement in the columns of the official paper to assist him. Under the ruling of the Post-Office Department, as the law now stands, a fraternal paper would render itself liable to be refused admission to the mails for doing so charitable an act.

The fraternal press wants the freedom enjoyed by the commercial press, that it may work out its mission of benevolence and charity.

A newspaper is a public intelligencer, and because of that fact it seeks and uses the mails. It is simply one method of promoting the public welfare. As such they are entitled to the highest consideration. But are they any more entitled to consideraton than another periodical, which is also a public intelligencer, and in addition promotes the broadest benevolence and protects and cares for masses of people who would otherwise become public charges to be supported at the public's expense?

AS TO THE HAUL.

We are ready to prove by statistical evidence that for every paper published by a fraternal society we will find two others with as long if not a longer haul.

CLOSING ARGUMENT.

We ask for the passage of our bill as introduced, because we feel that we are entitled to some established status. For years we have been left in uncertainty and doubt. One administration has ruled us in and another has ruled us out. We do not want it left to the conflicting opinions of successive officials. We are convinced that it is as embarrassing to post-office officials as it is to us, and that it will be mutually helpful to have the question settled by congressional enactment; and while we feel that we are doing, as benevolent organizations, the highest possible good to our country, we do not ask for special consideration. We are willing to pay our part of the postal deficit, whatever that may be, and ask only for a general law which will treat all alike. If we are compelled to pay an equal tax we feel that we are entitled to equal privileges under the law. In other words, it savors of class legislation to give a privilege to one public benefactor and deny it to another who is taxed the same for it. We are at peace with all publications, wish them success in every way, and only ask for ourselves equal opportunity.

Mr. WEEKS. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is clearly legislative, contrary to the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter when copies of any publication of the second class, mailed by a publisher at the pound rate or free in the county of publication, are undeliverable at the address thereon, the postmaster at the office of destination shall promptly notify the publisher of the fact, giving the reason therefor, and copies received five weeks after the mailing of the notice to the publisher, and in no instance until two successive issues thereof have been published, shall, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, be separately returned to the publisher thereof charged with postage at the third-class rate. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I would like to inquire of the distinguished gentleman in charge of the bill just what is the purpose of this paragraph?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, it has been reported to the committee, and is within the personal knowledge of members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, that many publications are sent to individuals when they are not subscribed for, and when the individual does not wish to receive them. The Government, in other words, is put to the expense of carrying periodicals for which there is no desire on the part of anyone except the publisher, who thus seeks to increase his circulation. This provision is intended to enable the department to return such periodicals to the publisher and collect third-class rates for the return.

Mr. MANN. Well, may I ask the gentleman whether there is any method of collecting third-class rates?

Mr. WEEKS. Why, I assume that the district attorney could do it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Supposing a man wants to send me a letter with postage due on it. There is no way by which the Government can compel me to take the letter and pay the due postage.

Mr. WEEKS. I think the gentleman misunderstands me. There is no power to compel him to take a periodical which he has not subscribed for and which he does not wish. In this paragraph it is designed to prevent carrying periodicals in the mails for which there is no subscription and which nobody wishes to receive.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman as to the purpose which he intended to accomplish; but will it accomplish that end? Where a publisher sends a publication through the mails and I decline to receive it, the Government sends it back to the publisher, marking on it so much due at third-class rates. The publisher may or may not receive it. How is the Government going to compel him to receive it and pay the postage?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know of any way unless proceedings are instituted against him by the district attorney.

Mr. MANN. But that would not warrant the district attorney, as the gentleman knows, in proceeding against a man for refusing to accept the mail and pay the postage on it when postage is due.

Mr. WEEKS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say that I was personally in favor of providing that in case the publisher did not pay for this return, his second-class privilege should be suspended until he did. But there was opposition in the committee to that course, and I came to the conclusion that it was based on good grounds. The lawyers on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads were of the opinion that the publisher could be proceeded against and the cost of returning the publication to him at third-class rates could be collected by the Government.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, if that is the case, I will not press my judgment against that of the lawyers on the committee, although I think they are wrong. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 2 of an act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, approved April 28, 1904, is hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that. Under the law as it now exists, third and fourth class matter may be sent, not less than 2,000 pieces, without putting the actual stamps on the mail matter, by the payment of postage on the entire consignment.

Mr. WEEKS. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. When that was proposed it was received with some ardor, and I know in my city is still quite extensively made use of. It is a very great convenience for people, in sending out some kinds of third and fourth class matter, to be able to have it sent out under the supervision of the post-office employees without actually putting the postage stamps upon it. Now, will the gentleman give us information as to the reasons why it is proposed to repeal the law which provides that present convenience?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, the reason is that the department recommends that it be repealed. The reason the department makes that recommendation is that it is believed that gross frauds could be perpetrated under the provision; that the individual mailing the letters or other matter might be in collusion with a clerk in the office and very many more copies be deposited and transported than the postage paid provided for. It does open the door for collusion and possible fraud, and for that reason the department and the committee believe it should be repealed.

Mr. MANN. Of course, it no more opens the door for possible collusion or fraud now than it did when it was enacted. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman, Has fraud been detected in connection with it? It is much more important to know that than to know what might be done, because the situation is the same to-day in reference to the possibility as it was when the law was enacted.

Mr. STAFFORD. The original proposition was adopted by the committee without very much consideration, without any extended hearings, more as an experiment than anything else, on the recommendation of the then Third Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Madden.

Mr. MANN. I do not agree with the gentleman about that. There was a great deal of agitation on the subject in the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. While the gentleman may disagree as to the amount of agitation in the country, he can not disagree as to the amount of consideration of the proposition in the committee.

Mr. MANN. I do not attempt to say that the committee gave consideration where the committee denies it.

Mr. STAFFORD. We adopted it more as a matter of experimentation than anything else. Since that time the Third Assistant Postmaster-General brought it to our attention that it was a possible means of corruption. You can see how it could be readily made such, and we believe that that character of service should not be continued.

Mr. MANN. Has any corruption been discovered?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have not sent our inspectors to detect it, but the mere fact that there is means for corruption and misappropriation of the Government's funds seems to the committee to be sufficient ground for repealing it.

Mr. MANN. Here is a proposition enacted into law which, as the gentleman says, gives a chance for corruption. It has been in the law for several years. The same chance for corruption has existed ever since the law was enacted; and if no corruption has been discovered, why does the committee at once reach the conclusion that corruption may exist?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think there is anything in the hearings given by the committee as to individual instances of corruption, but the department is convinced that it will open the door to the possibility of imposing on the Government a large amount of mail for which the Government receives no pay, and in order to remove that possibility they wish the law repealed.

Mr. MANN. Here is a proposition now under which the committee have decided not to have stamped envelopes with the return card on, and they propose to require people who are not now obliged to put stamps on their envelopes to put them on, without any knowledge as to whether the privilege has ever been used corruptly or fraudulently or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The action of the committee yesterday only applied to first-class mail. This limitation extends only to third and fourth class mails.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The action of the committee yesterday applied to the printing of all stamped envelopes and the return cards, whether used for first or third class matter. Stamped envelopes are sometimes used for third and fourth class matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only in the case of newspaper wrappers, and return cards are not printed on those.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. I have seen stamped envelopes on third-class matter.

Mr. WEEKS. I think, Mr. Chairman, the amount used for that purpose is negligible.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to have this law continued if it is used for corrupt purposes; but it seems to me that the committee has no information on this subject. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Insert as a new paragraph after line 14:

"That hereafter the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, establish in any community within or adjacent to the corporate limits or boundaries of any city or town a station, substation, or branch post-office, notwithstanding the limitation contained in the act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897."

Mr. WEEKS. I will reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, under existing law the Postmaster-General has authority to establish postal stations in cities having first and second class post-offices. The purpose of my amendment is to extend the authority of the Postmaster-General so that substations may be established wherever the interest of the public service may be required. For instance, I have in the district that I represent two very large colleges, situated about a mile from the post-offices.

Mr. WANGER. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is the amendment recommended by the Postmaster-General for several years on this subject?

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that it is. There are a number of places in the United States where the post-office authorities think that they ought to have the authority for the convenience of the people to establish these substations; for instance, for students of universities and colleges located in the vicinity of third and fourth class offices.

Under existing law these students, some 400 or 500 in number, have to walk a mile to get their mail, whereas if this is extended according to my amendment the Post-Office Department will be enabled to establish branch offices for universities and colleges and bring postal facilities to the very doors of the students.

If it is a meritorious proposition in the interest of the Post-Office Department and the people to have branch offices in first and second class post-office cities, it seems to me that no reasonable excuse can be given why this amendment should not be adopted, and the same facilities given to patrons of the third and fourth class offices.

Mr. FASSETT. Is not this mail taken, in the case of students in colleges referred to by the gentleman, by carrier?

Mr. AUSTIN. There is no carrier; no. The Assistant Postmaster-General told me that he had 15 or 20 other cases in the United States where they desire the service and where they ought to have it, but in view of the old law that has been on the statute book more than twenty years they are unable to extend to them that advantage. I ask the chairman of the committee not to deprive us of the opportunity of extending this postal service where it is so badly needed.

Mr. WEEKS. The Post-Office Committee will give the gentleman a hearing on a bill, but I shall have to make the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want something besides a hearing upon the bill; I want a report. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. This is clearly new legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

Insert a new paragraph after line 14, page 32:

"That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a system of local rural parcel post, as hereinafter provided, and to formulate and prescribe such rules and regulations under which such system shall be conducted as may be deemed necessary.

"SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act local rural parcel post shall be confined to and consist of the transportation and delivery by rural mail carriers, as mail matter and at the rates of postage prescribed in section 4 of this act, of articles and parcels of merchandise or matter, each article or parcel not to exceed 11 pounds in weight, when originating and mailed at a rural delivery distributing post-office and addressed to a patron of rural delivery from such office or any rural postal station tributary thereto; or when originating and mailed on a rural delivery route and addressed to a patron of the same rural delivery route or to any patron of any rural delivery route or rural postal station having the same distibuting office as the rural delivery route on which the article or parcel is mailed.

"SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to matter which is classified by law as first, second, and third class, nor affect existing rates of postage thereon; nor shall there be accepted for transportation and delivery, as mail matter, by rural mail carriers, any intoxicating liquors (ardent, vinous, spirituous, or malt), habit-forming drugs, explosives, liquids liable to explosion by shock or jar or to spontaneous combustion, or any matter exhaling bad odor, or which from its nature or constituency is liable to contaminate or damage the mails.

"SEC. 4. That the rates of postage on all articles, matter, or parcels entitled to transportation and delivery under the provisions of this act shall be 1 cent for 2 ounces or less, 2 cents for more than 2 ounces but not more than 4 ounces, 3 cents for more than 4 ounces but not more than 8 ounces, 4 cents for more than 8 ounces but not more than 12 ounces, 5 cents for more than 12 ounces but not more than 1 pound, and 2 cents per pound for each additional pound or fractional part of an additional pound up to and including a total of 11 pounds.

"SEC. 5. That the compensation of rural carriers be increased to the extent of all receipts for such parcel-post service hereby established, on each route, respectively, not to exceed $300 per annum to each carrier, to be paid under such rules and regulations as may be established by the Postmaster-General."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the amendment which I have offered is clearly subject to a point of order, on the ground of its being new legislation. But the amendment I offer is drawn exactly in line with the recommendation of Postmaster-General Meyer, when he was Postmaster-General, for the establishment of a parcels post to cover the entire country. Therefore, the rate fixed when applied only to rural routes must necessarily not only be equal to the expense incurred, but remunerative.

It calls for no appropriation of money, but only gives the carrier the fees derived on each route to an amount not exceeding $300 in any one year. This will enable the department to experiment with the parcels post, confining it to rural routes, without one cent of additional cost to the Government, and if it is shown to be a good service no doubt it will be perfected and carried out. This amendment, in the form of a bill, has been before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads for about two years. So far that committee has never acted upon it one way or the other. That bill as drawn was subjected to experts who are thoroughly acquainted with the postal laws, by whom I am advised that it is workable; that it does not contravene any existing postal legislation or regulation, and that it can be carried out. In this way we can try it, and try it intelligently. The whole country is demanding this legislation, and inasmuch as it will not cost the Government anything and can not fail to be of benefit, and was strongly advocated to be applied as a general law to the whole United States by former Postmaster-General Meyer, I do not see why we can not let it come in here as to rural routes only. Although I know it is clearly subject to a point of order, it seems wise to me not to make the point.

During the last Congress I tried to get favorable action on this amendment as a bill by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, but was unable to get consideration, but I have better prospects from the committee at this time and hope it will soon take up this or some other bill for the same purpose and give it full and, as I hope, favorable consideration.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The provision is clearly legislative, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Insert as a new paragraph on page 32, after line 14, the following:

"That from and after the 1st day of July, 1910, the compensation of rural letter carriers for carrying the mail six days each week on standard routes of 24 miles in length shall be the sum of $1,050 per annum, to be paid monthly; and on routes exceeding 24 miles in length, the sum of $43.75 per mile per annum for each mile in excess of 24 miles; and on routes under 24 miles in length, a corresponding reduction of compensation per mile per annum shall be made; on routes carrying the mail three days of each week of the same length as above, the pay shall be one-half the compensation there provided."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I admit that it is subject to a point of order, but this is the only way that I could get it before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph on page 32, after line 14, the following: "That upon application of any Senator, Representative, or Delegate it shall be the duty of a postmaster or carrier to furnish for official use the names, addresses, and occupations of those receiving mail within the State, district, or Territory so represented."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph in the nature of a limitation on the entire bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, on page 32, after line 14, as a new paragraph the following: "Provided, That no moneys appropriated herein shall be expended in offices of the first and second class where clerks and carriers in the City Delivery Service are required to work on Sunday, except in offices in which such employees shall be given compensatory time off during the working hours of one of the six days following said Sunday."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, that is clearly a limitation and not subject to a point of order under the ruling of the Chair on the proposed amendments offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MURPHY]. It is a clear limitation on an appropriation. It assumes the existence of two classes of city officers, the first and second class officers, where men who are compelled to work on Sunday are not given any compensatory time and in the other where men who are so compelled to work on Sunday are given compensatory time. Being clearly a limitation, it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that that amendment is subject to the point of order, although I would be exceedingly glad to have it adopted. It is perfectly manifest to the Chair, and to everybody else, that it is not the intention by that amendment to stop the postal service in New York City or other first-class offices, and hence it is perfectly manifest that the intention of the amendment is to change the law, which now provides the compensation of clerks in New York City and other first and second class offices, through the form of a limitation. Although it is the form of a limitation, it has been repeatedly ruled that the form of a limitation which must be construed as a change of existing law is a change of existing law, notwithstanding its form. In other words, the mere form does not always control.

The substance and the effect of the amendment must be taken into consideration, and if taken into consideration on this amendment they show that the department would have to pay additional compensation for clerks for Sunday service in first and second class offices, just as much as though Congress had specifically provided for additional compensation.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, on March 5, on page 2787 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a pending amendment was—

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid any railroad which requires any telegraph or telephone operator who handles orders pertaining to or affecting the movements of trains to handle the mail between stations and post-offices.

The Chair made the clear distinction, which it seems to me has always existed between those two classes of limitations, that where a limitation does not require an executive act on the part of any official of the Government it was a clear limitation, but where, under the guise of a limitation, it required some officer of the Government to do an executive act, no matter what its form was, it changed existing law. This requires no executive act whatever, it raises no salary and requires the employment of no additional persons, but simply provides that in one of two classes of offices there shall be no appropriation whatever for service.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair this is in the form of legislation changing existing law. It is clearly legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to be placed on page 32, after what has been adopted, line 14, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert as a new paragraph on page 32, after line 14, the following: "That the Postmaster-General shall require from carriers, Rural Delivery Service, a return of the number and approximate weight of unmailable packages carried by them, and the compensation received therefor, for a period of three months, beginning July 1, 1910, and shall report the result of this inquiry to Congress not later than December 10, 1910."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order——

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, the provision is unquestionably subject to the point of order, and it is exactly like the provision which went out a few moments ago in connection with another provision——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of California. If the gentleman will reserve his point of order, perhaps he will not object. Mr. Chairman, there is more or less agitation in the country about a rural delivery parcels post. I suppose it is generally known that at the present time citizens residing along a route may employ a carrier to bring them parcels from town at whatever price they please to pay, and the purpose of this amendment is to discover how extensive that business is, and whether there is really a demand on the part of the people who patronize the rural carriers in that way, and if we should discover that there is a general use of the rural carrier now by private arrangement, it might be advantageous and desirable to incorporate it in the postal service.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Was not that provision in the last bill?

Mr. SMITH of California. No; it was not. It is a plan for the discovery of some information as to whether the people of the country really do want to use the rural routes for a parcels post.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think that if the information is of the importance which the gentleman thinks it is, I might just as well withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I renew it until I ask some questions. Is this merely for the purpose of experimenting?

Mr. SMITH of California. It is merely to direct the Postmaster-General to call upon the rural carriers to report to him what amount of private business they are doing for a period of three months. This is merely to bring out the information by the 10th of December.

Mr. SIMS. You mean at the present rate of postage under the present permission?

Mr. SMITH of California. I am speaking of the parcels which the rural carriers carry privately outside of the mail.

Mr. SIMS. That they are now by law permitted to carry?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think that will be information that will be of any value as to what people will do if they had a lower rate of postage?

Mr. SMITH of California. I think if they can engage a carrier to bring 50 pounds of flour for 10 cents——

Mr. SIMS. If it will furnish any light on the subject and enable Congress to get information upon the question of a reduced parcels post, I have no objection.

Mr. SMITH of California. It will bring information as to what the people are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee insist upon his point of order?

Mr. SIMS. I withdraw it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order until I can get some information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will this delay a hearing in the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads on the bill of my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] looking to a local rural parcels post at this session of Congress?

Mr. SMITH of California. I can not speak for the committee, but I would like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and others that when they introduce bills it is a part of their duty to come before the committee and call them up for consideration, and I think the committee is willing to consider any bill that is before it.

Mr. SIMS. I do not want to be put in a false light. I asked Mr. Overstreet, formerly chairman of this committee, frequently, as well as other members of the committee, to consider that bill in the last Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. If this means a subterfuge or delay of legislation in the interest of the establishment of a local rural parcels post, then I object and insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the postal service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service. The establishment of a civil-pension roll or an honorable-service roll, or the exemption of any of the officers, clerks, and persons in the postal service from the existing laws respecting employment in such service is hereby prohibited.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he will kindly reserve it for a moment.

Mr. SABATH. I will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. STAFFORD. This has been carried in the bill from time immemorial, and it has never caused any harm to the service, but has been of benefit.

Mr. SABATH. In what way does it benefit the service? Can the gentleman state?

Mr. STAFFORD. By requiring only those who are capable of performing service to be employed and directing that those who are incapacitated be kept off the rolls of the Government.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. What authority has any department of the Government, the Post-Office Department or any other, to pay money for any purpose not specifically appropriated for that purpose, and why should there be contained in this bill or in any other bill a provision forbidding the Post-Office Department or any other department from improperly paying out the money of the Government? In other words, the Constitution provides that appropriations shall be made and shall be paid out only in the way that Congress says it shall be done, and yet the gentleman says this is put into this bill, and has been carried for a number of years, in order to prevent the Post-Office Department from improperly paying out money.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a direction on the part of Congress to the department as to the character of the employees in the service. If it is going to provoke debate, I have no desire to prolong it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] if he insists on his point of order?

Mr. SABATH. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

That if the revenues of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenue of said department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1911, and the sum needed may be advanced to the Post-Office Department upon requisition of the Postmaster-General.

The CHAIRMAN. This completes the reading of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

A few days ago, while this bill was under consideration, I made the statement that the clerks in the Post-Office Department were working from nine to ten, and, in some cases eleven, hours a day, and the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill replied to the effect that the clerks in the Chicago post-office were working on an average of eight hours and three minutes a day. Since that time I made an inquiry through the department as to how the time of the clerks was figured, whether it was figured on the basis of a seven-day week or a six-day week, and I was told in reply that the hours were figured on the basis of six days in the week, but that no credit was given to the men for any work they did on Sunday. I have not been able to ascertain how many hours a day they work on Sunday on the average, but I submit to the committee that if the hours they do work on Sunday were added to the hours which they work on week days, the number of hours per day would average very much more than those stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS.]

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I think, considering the statement just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], that I ought to have an opportunity to explain the figures which I gave. The gentleman from Illinois obtained from the department exactly the figures that were furnished me by the department of the number of hours that clerks work during the week. I stated the figures to the committee in good faith. I learned later that there was not included in those figures the time which clerks worked on Sunday, and I have attempted to obtain from the department those figures, so that I might correct my statement, but the department was unable to give them to me.

Therefore the gentleman from Illinois and myself are in exactly the same position in regard to that. It does not occupy all the time which the clerks work in the post-offices. The figures presented to the committee may be more or less correct. So far as the statement I made is concerned, I do not want the committee to get the impression that I had, under any circumstances, attempted to mislead.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want it to be understood that I cast any shadow upon the statement made by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The figures furnished by the Post-Office Department in all probability also did not include the extra time necessarily occupied by the clerks in studying the "city" and "distribution" schemes. These must be studied by the clerks outside of office hours if they are to keep up the records for efficiency necessary to retain desirable positions and to keep themselves in line for the efficiency promotion from $1,100 to $1,200.

Mr. WEEKS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and the bill as amended do pass.

The question was taken.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, pending that motion, I desire to ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as the chairman of the committee has found that there is need for additional clerks, that we will go back to that section and increase the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Regular order!

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21419, the post-office appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been perfected. The question is pending on the amendments, and the previous question is operating. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

A separate vote was not demanded.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to in gross.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Two gentlemen have arisen and asked for recognition—the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from New York is a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and the Chair will first ask the gentleman for what purpose he rises?

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I am opposed to the bill in its present condition, I rise to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, I rise, Mr. Speaker, having demonstrated that I was opposed to the bill, to move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. But under the practice it is proper that the first recognition should go to a member of the committee, provided that he arises to make a motion that is in order, and he is opposed to the bill, and the gentleman states that he is.

The Chair, therefore, following the usage, recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and on that motion demands the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would like to know if, under the rule that we adopted, as amended last spring, it would be possible for any gentleman to defeat the proposed amendments by saying that he was opposed to the bill, without stating any particular objection he had to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair must take the word of the gentleman—he is entitled to recognition if he is opposed to the bill—as the Chair took the word of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Chair, then, if in case that motion is voted down, would there then be an opportunity to make another motion?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman knows the rule. If the demand for the previous question is ordered, it brings the House to a direct vote.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 78.

So the previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit the bill, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to move to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. But one motion to recommit is in order. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WEEKS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on House bill 14464, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and ask that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill and asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

[For conference report and statement see House proceedings of March 1, 1910.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise a point of order to the conference report, on the ground that the conferees have exceeded their power in regard to the appropriation for playgrounds.

The House passed the following item:

Playgrounds: For maintenance, repairs, equipment, and supplies, $17,000, which sum shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The Senate added after the word "equipment" the word "supervision" and struck out the words—which sum shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Now, although the House said that $17,000 should be appropriated, and the Senate said that $17,000 should be appropriated, the conferees have stricken out the provision entirely, so that under the conference report there is no appropriation whatsoever for the maintenance of playgrounds.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, in what respect does the gentleman claim the conferees have exceeded their authority?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York state the number of the amendment which he refers to?

Mr. PARSONS. Amendment 75 on page 44 of the print of the bill which contains the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to examine the provision as it passed the House, and then as it passed the Senate, and then as it was agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I submit that there were two propositions before the conference. One was as to the amount. The second was as to the funds out of which it should be paid. As to the amount, the conferees could not go below the amount fixed by the House or above the amount fixed by the Senate, but were confined to the question in disagreement between the House and the Senate, which was between those two amounts. Then there was a further disagreement as to the fund the appropriation should be paid out of. The question is whether, when the House agrees to an item carrying an appropriation for a certain amount on certain conditions, and the Senate increases the amount and disagrees to the conditions, the committee of conference can strike out the whole thing. The conference report is that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with amendments as follows, and the amendment is to strike out that amendment and strike out the amended paragraph.

In other words, they propose to amend the items in dispute between the two Houses as to amount by striking out the whole thing.

Mr. TAWNEY. By omitting it.

Mr. MANN. It is not omitting it; it is striking it out.

Mr. GAINES. The situation is this: If the House appropriated $17,000 without any conditions, and the Senate had increased the amount to $32,000 without any conditions, could the conferees wipe out the entire appropriation?

Mr. MANN. I think plainly they could not. Of course this is a little different. The House makes an appropriation of $17,000, to be paid out of a certain fund. The Senate increases the amount, and says that it shall be paid out of another fund.

Mr. PARSONS. The Senate did not increase the amount. It agreed to the amount as passed by the House.

Mr. MANN. I thought the Senate increased the amount. If they did not, they ought to have done so.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The principle is the same.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman from New York: Did the Senate strike out the entire paragraph in the House bill, and reinsert that portion of it fixing the amount?

Mr. PARSONS. It did not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the bill here and will read it to see if the Chair gets the point of the gentleman from New York. As the bill passed the House it read:

Playgrounds: For maintenance, repairs, equipment, and supplies, $17,000, which sum shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The Senate amends that by amendment 74, after the word "equipment," on the first line, putting in the word "supervision," and in amendment 75 the Senate strikes out the following language: "which sum shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia."

In the settlement between the House and the Senate the whole item under the head of "playgrounds" is stricken out. Is that correct?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not exactly correct. In the points of disagreement, amendments 74, 75, 76, 77 deal with playgrounds. Seventy-six and 77 were agreed on and remained in the bill as amended by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. The conference report strikes out this language after the word playgrounds, "for maintenance, repairs, equipment, and supplies, $17,000." Not a word of it has been amended by the Senate.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the word "supervision," an amendment by the Senate in No. 74, is deemed by your committee as a very important word. Every dollar of that appropriation, nearly, could be spent in supervision, if it were deemed best. Indeed, that is the central word.

Mr. MANN. The "supervision" was in conference. The committee could agree to the amendment to strike out "supervision," because that was in conference. The "maintenance, repairs, equipment, and supplies, $17,000," was not in conference, because both Houses had agreed to that language. It has been repeatedly held by the Chair that committees on conference can not amend a provision which has been agreed to by both bodies. That decision was emphatically held in the oleomargarine case, which the gentleman from Minnesota ought to remember.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this fact: The amendments of the Senate have this effect. It changed entirely the purpose for which the appropriation was made by the House, and also changes the obligation of the treasury from which appropriation is to be paid.

Therefore, both propositions are in conference, namely, the object of the appropriation, and the treasury from which the appropriation was to be paid, and the conferees therefore had both propositions before them, notwithstanding there were a few words used by the House in making the appropriation after the Senate amendments were adopted. But these words have no relation whatever to the Senate proposition any more than they now have to the House proposition. The purpose of the House was to appropriate money for equipment of playgrounds. The purpose of the Senate was to appropriate money for the supervision of playgrounds. The House proposition was to pay the appropriation wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia, while the Senate proposition was to pay one-half of that appropriation from the District revenue and one-half from the Federal Treasury. Therefore both propositions as to the purpose, as well as to the manner of the payment of the appropriation was in dispute between the two Houses, and the conferees did not exceed their jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. It would have been an easy matter to throw the whole matter into conference if the Senate had desired, by striking out the paragraph and inserting the language put in by the Senate. Then the whole paragraph would have been in conference, and the contention of the gentleman would be in order; but as it is, the purpose of the Senate could not be taken that they meant to strike out the whole paragraph, because they did not strike it out.

Mr. TAWNEY. They changed the entire purpose of the paragraph.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under amendment 75 are these words:

Which sum shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

What sum? The sum of $17,000 mentioned in No. 74. That is construed with No. 74. They stand or fall together. The whole thing hinged in conference whether or not the whole amount of $17,000 should be paid out of the District revenues or one-half out of the revenues of the District and the remainder from revenues of the Federal Government. The House qualified the appropriation of the sum of $17,000 by saying that it should be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. That was in conference.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the statement of both the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Minnesota together show that the sole difference existing between the House and the Senate was a matter of detail as to how the specific sum should be spent.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The difference is far more material than that. The difference between the two Houses was as to the purpose of the appropriation, as well as the manner of payment. The House declared that this sum should be expended wholly for the purpose of equipment, and the Senate struck out that word and substituted the word "supervision," without any equipment whatever. If they had said "supervision and equipment," the only question would have been as to the manner of payment of the appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota will remember that during the discussion of this paragraph in the House the question whether that word "maintenance" covered the whole ground was considered. It was not the intention of the House simply to provide an appropriation that would equip these grounds, but we discussed the question whether the word "maintenance" was sufficiently broad to cover the question of supervision, and I told the committee when we had the matter under consideration that in my judgment the phraseology was sufficiently broad to cover all the expenses incident to playgrounds. I can quote from the RECORD upon that point. The House, when it adopted that language, supposed that it had adopted language sufficiently broad to cover the question of supervision.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ with the gentleman. The House adopted the language that has been read to the Speaker. That language has but one meaning, and that is equipment of playgrounds. The contest over this question was as to whether we were to appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury for supervision or equipment, and the committee first reported the provision for equipment, and the House so adopted it. Therefore the purpose of the appropriation has been changed by the Senate amendment as well as the manner of its payment. Both propositions being in conference, the conferees did not exceed their authority by omitting a provision carrying both propositions, because they were both in conference, and the conferees, representing both Houses, could agree only on the proposition to omit or strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to know whether both the House and the Senate did not agree that $17,000 was to be appropriated for playgrounds.

Mr. TAWNEY. For some purpose.

Mr. OLCOTT. And the conference report has stricken out every appropriation for playgrounds of every kind.

Mr. TAWNEY. The House said the $17,000 should be expended for equipment and the Senate said for supervision.

Mr. MANN. That is still in disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. TAWNEY. They eliminated the entire proposition.

Mr. MANN. I know, but the points in disagreement are still in disagreement. I submit that the point made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is not correct. The Senate insisted on the word "supervision" going in in connection with the appropriation. That is still in disagreement between the two Houses. It is for the House and the Senate to determine whether the word "supervision" remains in the bill or not. As to what treasury it shall be paid out of is still in disagreement. It is for the two Houses to determine what treasury this money shall be paid out of.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not in disagreement. The representatives of the two Houses have agreed that the whole paragraph shall go out.

Mr. MANN. What the representatives of the two Houses have agreed to——

Mr. TAWNEY. And the Senate has adopted the report.

Mr. MANN. Very well. They are still in disagreement, and while I admit that the two gentlemen of the conference committee and the gentleman from Minnesota come as near being the whole House as any three gentlemen in the House——

Mr. TAWNEY. All that would be necessary would be to add the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Nevertheless they are still in disagreement.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, is not the legitimate conclusion of this report of this conference committee that it is a frank statement of failure on their part to adjust differences, with the result that instead of trying to adjust differences they strike out the whole provision altogether? They admit they were unable to adjust differences.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman might apply that to 225 other points in this bill with equal force. We did agree on this, as we have agreed unanimously, the conferees of both Houses, upon all points of difference, and I want again to emphasize this, that the language under amendment No. 75 must be construed with the language of amendment No. 74, or the House has no standing in conference. That with the word "supervision" was all that was under conference in those two points, Nos. 74 and 75.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman must admit that there was no difference as to the amount appropriated. The sole difference between the House and the Senate was as to some detail as to what fund it should be taken from, or how it should be used. The committee confess that they are unable to adjust those differences by striking out this paragraph. There was no difference between the House and the Senate as to the amount agreed upon by each House.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I just want to say a word in reply to the gentleman. The House conferees were instructed by unanimous vote of this House that the playground appropriation should be paid under Nos. 74 and 75, wholly from the District revenues. That was the point in conference with the Senate, and the Senate contended it should be paid half and half from the Treasury of the United States and the treasury of the District, through their conferees. We agreed to disagree by striking out both paragraphs, namely, the Senate amendment and the House amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. And I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that is exactly what they could not do, because both the House and the Senate had agreed that $17,000 should be appropriated for playgrounds.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary situation seems very clear to me. The House and the Senate heretofore agreed on the amount, to wit, $17,000, and then differed as to the source from whence it should come and the method of its expenditure; and hence the only question in dispute is the source from which the money is to be derived and the limitation on its expenditure. That was all there was in dispute and hence in conference between the two Houses. There should be no trouble in reaching a proper conclusion in the matter.

The conferees on the part of the House exceeded their authority when they agreed to strike out the amount of $17,000 as well as what was in dispute and properly in conference. That the conferees could not do.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman contend for a moment that in striking out the words "which sum shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia" it was not a limitation upon the entire paragraph?

Mr. SULZER. Not at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. By striking out that language the whole paragraph was in disagreement and was afterwards put in conference——

Mr. SULZER. Not at all. As a matter of parliamentary procedure——

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). And that is entirely outside of the change made by transferring the appropriation from the purpose of equipping these playgrounds to the supervision of the playgrounds; independent of that change the language limiting the payment of the appropriation, confining it to a certain source, the striking out of that language put the entire paragraph in conference.

Mr. SULZER. I differ entirely with the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. In one case the money came wholly from the District of Columbia, in the other case half of it came from the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, under the rules, the parliamentary situation is simply this: Whether the conferees on the part of both Houses, having agreed upon a proposition, to wit, $17,000, the amount of money to be appropriated for playgrounds, afterwards could not agree to strike out that appropriation. Under the rules and as a matter of parliamentary procedure the conferees on the part of the House could not agree to strike out the appropriation any more than they could agree to new legislation. Hence, sir, the point of order, in my opinion, raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] is well taken and should be sustained. If the conferees on the part of the House are not able to support the House in its contention, then we ought to have new conferees who will carry out the wishes of the House. I am in favor of these playgrounds for the children of the District of Columbia, and I want to see them supported and maintained in accordance with the desires of the people that live in the capital city of our country.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, may I say one word further in conclusion? The conferees were instructed by a vote of the House to contend that this whole appropriation should be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, and that no part of it should be paid out of the Federal Treasury. Those were our instructions by a unanimous vote of the House. We had nothing else to do, if I may say so to the gentleman from New York, and we obeyed literally and to the letter——

Mr. SULZER. Then why do the conferees come in——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan (continuing). The instructions of this House.

Mr. SULZER. If the conferees had done their duty, the appropriation for $17,000 would have been made.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; our instructions were the appropriation had to be paid and paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. The Senate decided it should be paid half out of the District of Columbia and half out of the Federal Treasury, and there is the point of disagreement.

Mr. SULZER. But the appropriation of $17,000 was to be made, is not that the fact?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If we agreed to it, and therefore only in a qualified sense.

Mr. GAINES. Is not the question after all whether we will agree to the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. SULZER. I am coming to that.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion to the Chair, using the language of the gentleman from Michigan? The House gave two instructions: First, an appropriation of $17,000 for playgrounds, and to that the Senate agreed; second, that the money should come from the District revenues, and to that the Senate disagreed, and that was the item which was in dispute. The first set of instructions were agreed to by the Senate, and therefore were not in conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the House again to the provision as it appeared in the bill as it passed the House.

Playgrounds: For maintenance, repairs, equipment, and supplies, $17,000, which sum shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

That provision, as the Chair has read it, went to the Senate. The Senate amends first, in amendment numbered 74, after the word "equipment," by inserting the word "supervision," and again in the same provision, by amendment numbered 75, it struck out the words "which sum shall be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia." Now, the House and Senate were agreed on certain language, namely, "for maintenance, repairs, equipment, and supplies, $17,000."

But both Houses agreed to the text, the Senate proposing, however, to insert the word "supervision" as a change to the text. Now, that amendment of the Senate was to the provision of the House. But the amount of $17,000 appropriated, with the objects as defined by the House, could not be changed, because the Senate had not provided for a change by way of amendment. If the Senate had amended by striking out the whole paragraph and inserting a new paragraph, then the whole question would have been in conference, and it would have been admissible in settling the differences between the two Houses to have made any germane agreement that would bring the conferees together. Now, with the two amendments referred to, the House and the Senate, to settle the disagreements, at a part where there was no disagreement strikes out a whole provision.

The Chair thinks that is a change of the text to which both Houses had agreed, and the precedents, so far as the Chair has been able to examine them, are against the exercise of that power even by the House itself, without the concurrence of the other body. It could only be done by the House and by the Senate by a concurrent action. The Chair feels compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the conference report to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report forthwith to the House, striking out the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman that under the practice of the House the sustaining of a point of order to a conference report is equivalent to its rejection, and it seems to——

Mr. TAWNEY. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that that is exactly what was done on the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill only a week or so ago.

Mr. MANN. This has passed beyond the point of being referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is, and the Chair will verify his recollection—although it seems to be pretty clear—that the sustaining of a point of order to a conference report by the Chair is equivalent to its rejection, and that the next proceeding would be for the House to take such action as it may desire, de novo, as if this bill were here for the first time with the Senate amendments disagreed to. Now, there is a way, if the Chair is right about that——

Mr. MANN. It is in order to make a motion to agree to any of the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report forthwith, striking out the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on that motion. Not only is it without the power of the conferees to strike out the paragraph, but it is without the power of the House to strike it out.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is in the power of the House to amend by striking out.

Mr. MANN. It is not in the power of the House to strike out that which has already been agreed to.

Mr. SULZER. I move that the conference report——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] submit a motion? The Chair was not clear.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the motion, which is, as I suppose, similar to the motion that was made during the consideration of the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. The item in disagreement was in respect to an appropriation for the immigration commission, and that bill, by motion of the gentleman from New York, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report forthwith with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. But that was not a conference report.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was on a conference report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. The committee on the Senate amendments were in disagreement.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was not a full agreement of the conferees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate amendments were before the House in disagreement. The House receded from its disagreement, and then the question came on the Senate amendment, and the previous question was demanded; and after the previous question was ordered the question recurred on concurring in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. The bill was still in disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. TAWNEY. As I understand the ruling of the Chair sustaining the point of order, it is this item that is in disagreement between the two Houses just the same as the amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion I desire to make. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to amendments Nos. 74 and 75, and agree to the same.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The Senate has already passed upon this measure.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the statement of the Chair, sustaining the point of order, is to make the conference report as if it had not been made, and the bill stands now upon the House provisions and upon the Senate amendments. The House having possession of the bill, it is in order for the House to treat it just as it would have treated it if the conference report had been voted down, namely, the House can refer to the Committee on Appropriations. It would seem to the Chair the House may disagree or concur in the Senate amendments. They are undisposed of, and must be disposed of in some way.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A parliamentary inquiry. I understood the Speaker's ruling a moment ago upon the point of order made by the gentleman from New York to be that the House itself can not recede from legislation which had been agreed upon by the House and Senate. The difference between the two Houses being the funds from which it would be paid, the parliamentary inquiry is this: Does the Speaker now rule that the House can take up this bill as if it had never acted upon it?

The SPEAKER. The remark of the Chair that the gentleman calls attention to was more by way of illustration than otherwise. The direct question was not before the Chair. It was used as a matter of argument by the Chair. This is the condition as the Chair understands it: The House passed the bill; the Senate amended it; the House disagreed to the Senate amendments; it went to conference; the conference has constructively failed; and this bill is now before the House as if it had not gone to conference. So that the Senate amendments must be disposed of.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the Chair hold that the motion I made is in order?

The SPEAKER. To refer this bill to the committee?

Mr. TAWNEY. To the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the motion the gentleman made was to refer this bill, with the amendments, to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report the bill back striking out that paragraph. That motion is not in order, because the motion to strike out the paragraph would not be in order; and the gentleman can not evade that by directing the committee to report back a motion which is not in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not this bill in the same position as it was after it had been passed with amendments by the Senate and messaged over?

Mr. MANN. Except that it does not have to go to the Committee on Appropriations, as it would have had to go when it first came over. It would have to go to the Committee of the Whole again. That is the point about that.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair may have misled the House, or the House may not have understood what was in the mind of the Chair in what was said touching this bill. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair will again say: The House passed the bill; the Senate amended the bill; the House then took action upon it, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate, this being one of them. A conference was held. Now that conference has constructively failed. So that the status is that the disagreement between the House and the Senate remains unsettled. Now, any action upon the part of the House that would settle that disagreement is in order.

Mr. PARSONS. Then, I move to recede and concur.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KEIFER. Let me make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it in order now to move to concur in any of the Senate amendments?

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to recede and concur or to further insist.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I made a motion. I would like to know, I have tried to ascertain, whether or not it was in order to move to commit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back with an amendment striking out the paragraph. Now, if it is not in order, I wish to make a motion which, I think, will be strictly in order along the lines of the suggestions of the Chair.

Mr. PARSONS. I have already made a motion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota made his motion first.

Mr. PARSONS. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The SPEAKER. One moment, please. The Chair desires the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota, and the Chair reads from the Manual:

Text to which both Houses have agreed may not be changed except by the consent of both Houses.

Any motion that will bring the House to an agreement with the Senate, to recede and concur, would be in order, and a motion to further insist on the disagreement would be in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KEIFER. I should like to say a word.

The SPEAKER. And possibly a motion to refer alone, if not accompanied by instructions that the committee should do a thing which the House could not do, would be in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to submit this motion——

Mr. PARSONS. I have already made a motion to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. One at a time! One moment!

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move, then, to refer the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report back to the House an agreement to Senate amendment No. 75, with an amendment making the appropriation payable out of the District revenues for the fiscal year 1915, and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. PARSONS. I raise the point of order to that motion.

The SPEAKER. To which motion the gentleman from New York makes a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the motion reported from the Clerk's desk, so we will know what it is. This matter of offering amendments from the floor of the House, without having them reported from the Clerk's desk, is not very satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Refer the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report it back to the House with a recommendation that Senate amendment 75 be agreed to with an amendment making the appropriation payable out of the District revenues for the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. MANN. Upon that we make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, in the first place that this is a bill making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911——

Mr. TAWNEY. And for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. The "other purposes" do not make any difference. It is without the province of the Committee of the Whole, if the House were in Committee of the Whole, to insert a legislative provision. To provide that this money shall be paid out of the revenues of some subsequent year is to legislate, not appropriate, and the only authority to make an appropriation is to make an appropriation payable for the fiscal year. This is to make an appropriation payable in some future year and is legislation and not appropriation.

Mr. PARSONS. I make the further point of order, Mr. Speaker, that my motion has precedence and is of higher privilege.

The SPEAKER. To this motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] both interpose points of order. Now, the Chair finds that so far as precedents can settle this matter, it is settled. The Chair reads from page 630, volume 5, of the Precedents, section 6225:

The stage of disagreement having been reached, the motion to insist has precedence of the motion to refer.

On July 31, 1886, the Speaker laid before the House the bill (S. 1599) for the relief of the Phoenix National Bank, of the city of New York, with an amendment of the House thereto and a message from the Senate disagreeing to the amendment and requesting a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, moved to refer the bill, amendment, and message to the Committee on Claims.

Pending this motion, Mr. Darwin R. James, of New York, moved that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Speaker held the latter motion to be privileged, for the reason that the bill had now reached the stage of actual disagreement between the two Houses, and the appointment of conferees on the part of the House would be in order as soon as the House had insisted on its amendment and agreed to the request of the Senate for a conference.

That was a ruling by Speaker Carlisle. The precedent is exactly in point, and therefore as a motion to further insist on the disagreement would be in order a preferential motion that the House do recede and concur will precede or postpone that motion that the House do further insist.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, allow me to call the attention of the Chair to what I think is a plain distinction between the two cases. Unquestionably the decision just read was right. There has been no action taken. If I understand the holding of the Chair here, it was that after sustaining the point of order against the conference report it carried us back to the place where the conference was authorized by the House, and no further. Now, before that authority was exercised, we had disagreed to the Senate amendments, and it would take something to reconsider that before the gentleman from New York can make a motion, for already the House, as the RECORD will show, has agreed to these amendments. Now, we are at the situation that follows a disagreement. That was not the case in the precedent cited in the digest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will notice that this bill, upon a disagreement between the two bodies, has been to conference. The conferees reported, and that report has been rejected. Now it stands just as in the precedent cited, in disagreement. But it would stand there permanently unless the House took some further action by which it insists on its disagreement and asks for a further conference. So that if a motion is in order to further insist, so that we can take a step forward in the disagreement, much more is a motion in order that the House do recede and concur.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it is worth while, Mr. Speaker, to give a little attention to this. The motion of the gentleman from New York is not to recede and concur, but to treat it as though we had not disagreed at all, and that was not the condition in the precedent cited.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken.

Mr. KEIFER. I have heard the motion. It is not to recede or to reconsider the vote by which we disagreed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will admit at once that at the present stage of this bill a motion is in order that the House do further insist.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. If a motion is in order to further insist, and there must be some motion in order—if it is in order that the House do further insist on its disagreement, the preferential motion is always in order that the House do recede and concur, because that would bring the two bodies to an agreement if the House saw proper to adopt it.

Mr. KEIFER. But no such motion has been made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] proposes a motion that the House recede and concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. GAINES. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAINES. As I understand the rule, it gives preference to a motion to recede and concur because that motion tends to bring the Houses more strictly into agreement. At the present time, in view of the action taken by the Senate, that would not do it. My inquiry is, Is it not in order, and of higher privilege under the circumstances now existing, to move to recommit with directions to the conference committee to make a report in the shape in which the report was already made?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, for reasons heretofore stated and the precedents, the Chair does not believe it to be in order. Will the gentleman from New York submit his motion?

Mr. PARSONS. My motion is that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments 74 and 75 and concur in amendments 74 and 75, and on that I ask for the previous question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to a point here that was not really in controversy and is now.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House recede and concur.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In the conference the word "supervision" was not considered, because the whole paragraph is stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no knowledge of what was considered in conference.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is difficult for me to hear a word that the Chair says, for there are 14 or 15 speakers right behind me. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment 74 is to insert the word "supervision" after "equipment." Amendment 75 strikes out the words "which sum shall be paid only from the revenues of the District of Columbia." There are two amendments. Now, then, the gentleman from New York moves that the House do recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard in behalf of the committee.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman in charge of the bill, the gentleman from Michigan, is entitled to the floor, and while the gentleman from New York has offered a motion which is preferential, yet he can not take the gentleman from Michigan from the floor.

Mr. PARSONS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I object to the gentleman's yielding. He has not the floor.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Michigan is in charge of the bill and the report, and therefore is in control of the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] calls the attention of the Chair to a practice that has prevailed in the House, so far as the Chair recollects, without exception, namely, that the Member in charge of a bill does not lose the floor on account of a preferential motion having been made by some Member who has not the floor. Now, the motion of the gentleman from New York is that the House recede and concur. That is the preferential motion, it is true, but the gentleman from Michigan does not lose the floor on that account.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this word "supervision" is an exceedingly important one in this connection. I may say, as a general proposition, that that word has brought the whole playground question into disrepute in this District and has discredited it not only with the committee, but with the House. Year after year we have had this word "supervision" in the appropriation, and the funds have been dissipated which have been appropriated by the House—by the District on the one hand, and by the citizens on the other. I am entirely within the truth when I say that a very large percentage of all of the money that has been appropriated in years preceding this has been dissipated through the word "supervision." If that word rests here, you can expend $16,900 for supervision, and there is no power that can touch it; 50, 60, 70, 80 per cent of the money which has been appropriated in previous years has been paid out for "supervision."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. In what way does he construe the word "supervision?" Is it for the payment of salaries instead of for the payment for equipment?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is the very thing in issue, the payment of salaries; and I may say that there is a gentleman whose salary is involved in this $17,000 who has given certain Members of this House no rest since this matter has been in question, and members of this committee can testify that in other years, where the gentleman was getting, as stated in the Senate hearings of 1909, an aggregate, not out of this appropriation entirely, but an aggregate of $6,000 for the supervision of playgrounds of the District and as secretary of the Playground Association of America; that he went to room after room, visiting Members by day and by night, beseeching them to vote for the appropriation that should have the word "supervision" in it, well knowing that not only he, but every employee whom he might O. K., could draw his money under that word, and the equipment has gone begging——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman referred to was getting $2,400 a year, was he not, without any authority of law and without any advice of that fact to the Committee on Appropriations to the effect that he was on the pay roll at all?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That leads to another thing. The whole thing has been from the beginning a sort of hodgepodge. There has been no head to it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Let me finish this first. A voluntary association of good people—and I have nothing to say against them—came together and organized a children's playground association. They were busy business men. Like such men they turned the matter over to their agent, an imported man, at a large salary, who divided his time and interests, drawing salaries from other sources, writing books on playgrounds, and giving his time and strength to other work, and yet drawing from this alone $2,400 a year. He stated in the Senate committee two or three years ago that his aggregate income was $6,000 per year. We could get no report from anybody. We knew that the money was being dissipated. We have sought to know where the money of the people went, and we have said to some of these people, "When you get an organized body of men to whom this matter can be referred, to whom reports can be made, and you can make a detailed statement of your expenditures year by year, and what for, then we will be ready to report out an appropriation for this purpose." Upon that ground I stand to-day. But, as a member of this committee, I shall not consciously and knowingly vote to use the people's money where there is not an accountability for expenditure [applause], and that is what the word "supervision" means; and if the whole paragraph had not been stricken out, that word would have been stricken out, or we would have been in conference to this hour over this bill. We know what it means.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman name to me any appropriation that has been made by the Government out of which the salary of the gentleman to whom he refers was paid?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The whole amount of $10,000 some years ago was turned over to this committee, as I remember. It was paid in part from the government appropriation and part out of the funds raised by the citizens who supplemented what was paid by the Government.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman is making a serious statement, which appeals to the prejudice of Members here, and I ask him to specify the year. I have the appropriations and I must contradict the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MADDEN. I can reply to the gentleman, if the gentleman from Michigan will permit; it was not only in one year, but three separate years this gentleman, whose name I am willing to give to the House——

Mr. PARSONS. Go ahead.

Mr. MADDEN. Doctor Curtis, as he called himself, visited every member of the Committee on Appropriations, and particularly the members of the subcommittee having jurisdiction over the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and endeavored to show that he was a philanthropist doing philanthropic work because he believed in that kind of work and indicated that he was doing it gratis, and we discovered, after he had been at work two years on the proposition, that he was paid at the rate of $2,400 per year out of the appropriations made by Congress for the maintenance of play grounds.

Mr. PARSONS. May I correct the gentleman? There was only one year in the three years we have made appropriations where the appropriation was made for supervision, and that was the first year, and that was for $5,000, and the appropriation read:

For maintenance, supervision, and complete equipment of outdoor playgrounds, $5,000.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the complaint that I have to make is that the gentleman received the compensation without having had any appropriation made for the payment of his services, in violation of the law.

Mr. PARSONS. But was that the fact?

Mr. MADDEN. He was paid out of the sum of money appropriated by Congress for maintenance of playgrounds.

Mr. PARSONS. Was he not paid by this association, which had raised more money than the Government appropriated?

Mr. MADDEN. He was paid out of money appropriated by Congress.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to proceed. This whole school question has been one of the most troublesome that the House has had to deal with during my connection with it for now nearly twelve years. I want to call attention to some of its inroads upon the Public Treasury. The estimates submitted the year before last were $4,147,000 for public schools; last year, $4,708,000. This year the board of education asked the District Commissioners to submit estimates for $4,850,000. If you add to that $180,000 asked by the association for playgrounds; if you add to that $480,000 that must be paid out of the District revenues on the bonded debt; if you add to that $80,000 that must be paid for interest on current indebtedness; if you add to that $400,000, which must be paid, if the agreement between the District and the Federal Government is kept, you have an aggregate of $5,940,000. Out of what? Out of the total District revenue of $6,337,970, leaving the pitiable sum of $397,000, the District's part of the contribution toward the conduct of all other departments of the Government for the next fiscal year. Where does the rest come from?

The Government of the United States puts its hand in its pocket and hands over $6,337,970. For what? To meet the current expenses of the District of Columbia after you allow the estimate of the school board, not of the commissioners; the estimate of the Playgrounds Association, not of the commissioners, and the debts which under the law must be paid, it simply shows, gentlemen, unless somebody stands with his foot at the door of the Treasury, every dollar raised of the District's revenues will go in the public schools and the playgrounds. Now, what? I have here, on the authority of the Census Bureau, this statement, which gives the per capita cost of education in this and a number of other cities. It costs this year for every person living in the District of Columbia $8.57 for education. It would cost, if the appropriations asked of the commissioners by the school board were allowed, $14 per capita this year and $86 per pupil. It costs Detroit, concededly having among the best schools in the country, $23 per pupil. In Detroit it is $4.92 per capita.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will.

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman from Michigan has just corrected the last figures the gentleman gave. Were the other figures which the gentleman has given per capita or per pupil?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The first were per capita and the next per pupil.

Mr. PETERS. What is the per pupil cost in the Washington schools?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is what I am getting at. If the appropriations were allowed as asked, it would be $86 for 1911, as against $23 in Detroit per pupil.

Mr. PETERS. How much is the cost per pupil to-day in the schools of Washington?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I have not that, but I can give you the per capita. It is $8.50 per capita and about $50 per pupil, whereas in Baltimore, our neighboring city, where conditions are similar, it is $4.09, or less than half; Cleveland, $5.84, as against $8.57 here for this year; Buffalo, $4.54, as against $8.57; Pittsburg—I presume the wealthiest city in this country in proportion to population—$6.17, as against $8.57 in the District of Columbia; Cincinnati, $4.94, as against $8.57; Milwaukee, $4.58, as against $8.57.

There is not a city in the United States, according to the Census Bureau, where it costs so much per capita or per pupil for education as in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman undoubtedly will concede that a large portion of this increase in the per capita for education here in the District of Columbia is due to the fact that we are obliged to maintain two distinct systems, one for the whites and one for the blacks?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Let me say to the gentleman that in the neighboring city of Baltimore the conditions are exactly alike, and there it is $4.09, or less than half what it is in Washington.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Does the gentleman know anything about the educational facilities they have in Baltimore? Compare us with Cleveland, as you did a moment ago.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Cleveland, $5.84 per capita, as against $8.57 here.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. If you eliminate the two systems here, you eliminate the difference between the two.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In Detroit it is $4.92, as against $8.57 here. If you allow the estimates of the board of education this year, it is $14.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much would it increase the per capita cost if we appropriate $17,000 for playgrounds?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, that is not the question at issue just now. I am calling attention to the era of extravagance; and I may say, in friendly criticism, that our schools in the District are not, in my judgment, giving value received. While we pay out, approximately, $3,000,000 for their education, we have asked them to pay $17,000. For what? We bought their playgrounds and equipped them, and we asked these people to pay $17,000 to take care of their own children on the playground. What, besides, do they pay? Up to and including the eighth grade the nontaxpayer does not pay one dollar, and there are multitudes of men in this city who do not pay a dollar's tax, who are getting good salaries, who are counted wealthy in the States they come from, who are educating their children here at the expense of the United States and of the District. Their children do not buy a book, they do not buy a pencil, they do not buy a paper pad, they do not buy a penful of ink or a pen; absolutely nothing. Everything is free up to and including the eighth grade.

Now, what have we done? We have simply asked these people, in fairness, gentlemen, to do this thing—to pay this $17,000. And I want to say that in the twelve years I have been here I have seen nothing comparable to the lobbying done to increase the salaries of teachers and to gain these appropriations for the playgrounds. The House conferees have been severely criticised, privately and in the press, because we stood for what the House voted. Now, gentlemen, in conclusion, is it asking too much of these people, into whose hands we this year pour $6,300,000 of money—is it too much to ask them to show their appreciation of the Government's generosity by paying $17,000 to supervise, not equip, as we do that; but simply supervise the playgrounds in which their free-educated children play?

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. OLCOTT. Is it not a fact that the organic act of 1878 provided for the expenditure by the District of Columbia of half and the United States Government of half for all these expenses, and is not the gentleman getting away from the question when he talks about this single item?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We do that according to the estimates. We did not agree to that estimate. The House unanimously voted against it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not come here with any brief from the residents of the city of Washington; but it appears strange to me that whenever anything is before the House affecting an appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, the members of the Appropriation Committee continually talk about the residents here who, they say, pay insufficient taxes. It is as if they wished to create the impression that the citizens of Washington stood with their hats in hand and became common mendicants asking money from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. That comes pretty near being the case. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLCOTT. That is what the gentleman thinks. As a matter of fact, if we refer to the time of the formation of the District of Columbia, we will find the Government of the United States is not now doing anything more than it agreed to do. The organic law of the District provided that the United States should pay one-half and the District of Columbia the other half of the total expenses.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the District pay half of the expense?

Mr. OLCOTT. The District pays its share.

Mr. PAYNE. How much are they borrowing from the Treasury now?

Mr. OLCOTT. They are not borrowing any more money from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, that debt has run for a number of years.

Mr. OLCOTT. The District borrowed money from the Government of the United States at one time, and they are gradually paying that up by the sinking fund now provided for.

Mr. PAYNE. I am glad to hear they are paying it off, because I believe the District Committee, of which my colleague is a member, ought to provide a system by which it may be paid. The taxes are low; a rate of $1.50 on the hundred. I do not know of any city of its size that comes anywhere near that. I think it is simply just to the people of the United States that the District ought to be assessed enough to pay its debt.

Mr. MADDEN. Can the gentleman tell how much the District of Columbia owes in total?

Mr. OLCOTT. I regret to say that I can not now.

Mr. MADDEN. About $11,000,000 of funded debt.

Mr. OLCOTT. Something of that kind.

Mr. MADDEN. How much does the District owe in nonfunded debt?

Mr. OLCOTT. About three and a half millions.

Mr. MADDEN. About four millions.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman tell us how much Chicago owes? [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; about $11,000,000. How much does New York owe? [Great laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. Well, New York can borrow money, which Chicago can not. [Cries of "Oh!" and laughter.] The law in your State will not allow Chicago to borrow.

Mr. OLCOTT. I am always very glad to hear pleasantries between the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois, but not in my time; I should like to proceed.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. OLCOTT. I decline to yield now.

Mr. MADDEN. Just one question.

Mr. OLCOTT. If you will ask a question, I will yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know if the gentleman thinks that the fundamental law of 1878, to which he has referred, provided for the purchase, maintenance, equipment, and supervision of playgrounds.

Mr. OLCOTT. I will say that it provided for the expenditures of all moneys that are properly needed by the citizens, and I think an appropriation for playgrounds is a proper expenditure for the use of the people.

In a compilation of special reports of statistics of cities having a population of over 30,000, including the year 1905, published in 1907, tables are given which clearly show that Washington real estate assessment at 67 per cent is high in comparison with that of other cities of about the same size.

For example, take the 10 cities which, in accordance with this census estimate, rank from 11 to 20 in the United States. The figures as to population and assessed valuation of real estate are as follows:

	Population.	Assessed value.
Cincinnati	343,327	$180,528,850
Detroit	325,563	200,304,940
Milwaukee	312,948	152,087,855
New Orleans	309,639	111,768,121
Washington	302,883	239,461,985
Newark, N. J.	283,280	153,006,055
Minneapolis	261,974	104,002,917
Jersey City	232,699	95,935,305
Louisville	222,660	92,425,344
Indianapolis	212,198	94,761,400

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know the basis upon which valuations were made?

Mr. OLCOTT. The valuations in the city of Washington are made at 67 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know on what basis the valuations were made in the other cities?

Mr. OLCOTT. They are practically the same in the other cities that I have looked into. I will file this statement that I have in the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. In filing the statement, I suggest that you give the manner in which the assessment is levied.

Mr. OLCOTT. The assessed and taxed portion of the city of Washington is about one-half of the entire District territory, inasmuch as the Government is the owner of the remainder, which, of course, is exempt. Comparing the population and the assessed valuation of the several cities mentioned in the above table, it would appear that this half of the city of Washington is assessed more heavily than any of the cities of its own class in point of population. One and one-third times as heavily as Cincinnati, which has more than 40,000 more people; one and one-fifth times as heavily as Detroit, which has about 23,000 more people; one and one-half times as heavily as Milwaukee, which has over 10,000 more people; two and one-sixth times as heavily as New Orleans, which has nearly 7,000 more people; one and one-half times as heavily as Newark, which has 93 per cent as many people; two and one-third times as heavily as Minneapolis, which has nearly 87 per cent as many people; two and one-half times as heavily as Jersey City, which has nearly 77 per cent as many people; two and three-fifths times as heavily as Louisville, which has nearly 74 per cent as many people; and two and one-half times as heavily as Indianapolis, which has about 70 per cent as many people.

These comparisons are made without reference to the basis of assessment. If Washington's rate of assessment were increased to 100 per cent, it would, according to the census figures of 1905, yield a total valuation of $359,192,977, far in excess of the total assessments of the other nine cities of its own population group, if brought to the same basis. The following table shows strikingly the effect of bringing Washington's assessment to the point of full value, at the same time giving the present rate of assessment in a manner to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois:

	Present rate.	Assessed value on 100 per cent basis.
Milwaukee	50	304,074,710
Cincinnati	60	300,881,410
Minneapolis	50	208,005,834
Detroit	100	200,304,940
Newark	100	153,006,055
New Orleans	75	149,024,160
Jersey City	70	137,705,043

If Washington's taxable property were assessed on a basis of 100 per cent it would, according to the census figures of 1905, be assessed $278,664,127 more heavily than Cincinnati on the same basis, $158,888,037 more heavily than Detroit, $207,155,622 more heavily than Milwaukee, $247,424,856 more heavily than New Orleans, $206,186,922 more heavily than Newark, $255,190,060 more heavily than Minneapolis, $263,257,672 more heavfly than Jersey City, $266,757,633 more heavily than Louisville, and $264,431,577 more heavily than Indianapolis.

Washington's assessment is so high, so much higher indeed than that of any other city, that when combined with a comparatively low rate of taxation—$1.50 per hundred—to produce the tax levy, the resultant, being the actual money paid here per capita in the form of taxes for the support of the Government, is higher, without exception, than is paid per capita in any other city of this group. Here is a striking comparison, taken from the census figures for 1905, between Washington, as regards the per capita tax levy and the per capita assessment, and other cities with which it is possible to compare it, stated in tabular form:

	Per capita tax levy.	Per capita assessment.
Cincinnati	$10.07	$863.07
Detroit	12.44	846.36
Milwaukee	11.14	611.14
New Orleans	12.13	551.28
Washington	12.79	852.70
Newark	11.13	671.64
Minneapolis	12.49	529.41
Jersey City	9.24	465.02

In other words, the taxed half of the District stands for an assessment of $852.70 for each man, woman, and child within the capital area, $189.63 more than Cincinnati, $6.32 more than Detroit, $241.56 more than Milwaukee, $301.42 more than New Orleans, $181.06 more than Newark, $323.29 more than Minneapolis, $387.68 more than Jersey City, $229.33 more than Louisville, and $176.60 more than Indianapolis. And on this assessment basis each Washingtonian pays a yearly tax heavier by $2.72 than that paid by each resident of Cincinnati, by $0.35 than that paid by each resident of Detroit, $1.65 more than each resident of Milwaukee, $0.66 more than each resident of New Orleans, $1.66 more than each resident of Newark, $0.30 more than each resident of Minneapolis, $3.55 more than each resident of Jersey City, $1.20 more than each resident of Louisville, and $2.85 more than each resident of Indianapolis.

These comparisons, it is to be remembered, lie between Washington, a noncommercial city, restricted in its industries by acts of Congress, with its taxable area constantly being diminished by condemnations for the Government's own uses, and cities that are growing rapidly in all respects, in industrial activity, in all forms of wealth, and without the restriction of governmental ownership within the municipal areas. It should not again be charged that Washington is undertaxed or underassessed, that its residents pay less than their fair share of the cost of capital maintenance, when, according to the Government's own figures, compiled by scientific processes by the Census Bureau, it is statistically demonstrated that Washingtonians were, in fact, in 1905 more heavily taxed per capita and more heavily assessed than the people of any other community of relatively the same size.

The burden imposed by Congress upon the local taxpayer is shown by these census figures of 1905 to be heavier than that which the average self-governing American municipality imposes upon itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this question of playgrounds is to be considered exactly on the same basis as the question of any other expenditure for the city of Washington. If playgrounds are right for congested communities, playgrounds for the city of Washington should be bought, equipped, maintained, and supervised in exactly the same manner and from the same funds that provide for all other departments—police, fire, education, maintenance and care of streets, and all the other expenses necessarily incident to the government of a city.

How anyone at this time, in view of what playgrounds have done for congested cities, can seriously antagonize an item such as this, is something beyond my ken.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. OLCOTT. No, not now. And if at some time there has been some money improperly paid to some person who was supervising those playgrounds, that is no reason for saying that a proper appropriation should not be made for playgrounds at this time. I, for one, am entirely sick of hearing of the difference of this particular item and that particular item; and when it comes to answering the gentleman who has charge of this bill, relative to the amount of money that is paid for schools, when he instances the number of people who live here and do not pay taxes, who take advantage of the schools, I would say to him that those are not the people who use the playgrounds. The reason for voting this additional money for playgrounds is to be found by looking at the condition of the children in the poorest parts of this city and the most congested parts of this city. If you gentlemen would do as some of us who are members of the District of Columbia Committee have to do, and go down into some of these places, and look at some of the rookeries that there are in the city of Washington, you would want to rise and vote for every cent of money that could properly be expended to mitigate those ills to some degree.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there are in this city 773 acres of parks and open areas that are maintained by the Government of the United States as playgrounds?

Mr. OLCOTT. I am aware of that; and yet there still remains the need of playgrounds in the congested parts of the city.

Mr. MANN. The parks that the gentleman from Minnesota speaks of are located where people can go to them only in automobiles.

Mr. TAWNEY. I maintain that they are not in the parts of the city where there is no congestion.

Mr. OLCOTT. As far as the good of humanity is concerned, even the great Central Park in the city of New York did not do as much good, from the moral standpoint, as the tearing down of what used to be Mulberry Bend and making a park there. Talk about Rock Creek Park! The people whose interest we are considering here, and whom I am talking about, have not money enough so that they can afford to pay car fare to get to Rock Creek Park, even if they had the time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not talking about Rock Creek Park. I am talking about parks which are under the control of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds and maintained by the United States, and you have 773 acres in these open areas within the city.

Mr. OLCOTT. The gentleman may speak of large areas and acreage, but most of the places he is talking about are places where they have signs, "Keep off the grass." [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. There is not a sign of that kind in the city of Washington.

Mr. OLCOTT. If there are no signs of that character, there are fences around them.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the gentleman should confine himself to facts.

Mr. OLCOTT. And if the children go on the grass, they will find some servitor who will promptly warn them off.

Mr. SHERLEY. What would the gentleman say to the statement of Colonel Crosby, having charge of these grounds, that there is not a "Keep off the grass" sign on any of them?

Mr. OLCOTT. I have taken that back. The gentleman need not ask the same question as was asked by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. I heard the gentleman's declaration, but I did not hear his disclaimer.

Mr. OLCOTT. I say there is either a sign "Keep off the grass" or a very positive intimation to the children that they can not run on the grass.

Mr. TAWNEY. That statement is not correct.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's statement is not accurate.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan has charged that the appropriations for playgrounds have been dissipated and that the committee has been unable to secure any report as to where the money of the people went. As I understand, all appropriations for the District of Columbia are disbursed only upon order of the Board of District Commissioners, and each voucher, before payment, must be approved by the auditor of the District of Columbia. His certification means that the expenditure is authorized by law. All appropriations for playgrounds have been spent in this manner, and the reports of the expenditures are public records and available to any Members of the House upon request. The only connection the playground association has with the expenditures is that they submit recommendations to the commissioners from time to time. The final decision rests with these officials as to whether the expenditure is wise or is properly payable out of the appropriation.

It is a serious reflection upon the men and women who compose the Playground Association to state that the funds have been dissipated. Perhaps it would be of interest to the House to have the names of the officers and board of directors of the Playground Association. They are as follows:

Hon. Frank H. Hitchcock, president; Mr. Arthur C. Moses and Miss Edith C. Westcott, vice-presidents; Mr. John B. Sleman, jr., treasurer; Mr. James E. West, secretary. Board of directors: Mr. Allen D. Albert, jr., Mr. William H. Baldwin, Mr. Ernest P. Bicknell, Mr. E. N. Brown, Miss Elizabeth V. Brown, Mr. D. J. Callahan, Mr. Fred G. Coldren, Judge William H. De Lacy, Mr. John B. Dickman, Dr. Merrill E. Gates, Prof. B. T. Janney, Maj. William V. Judson, Dr. George M. Kober, Mr. Otto Luebkert, Prof. W. S. Montgomery, Mr. Arthur C. Moses, Mr. B. W. Murch, Mr. Thomas C. Noyes, Mrs. Giles Scott Rafter, Mrs. Henry T. Rainey, Mr. Cuno H. Rudolph, Dr. W. H. Seaman, Mr. John B. Sleman, jr., Mr. Eugene E. Stevens, Dr. Rebecca Stoneroad, Maj. Richard Sylvester, Dr. William Tindall, Rev. John Van Schaick, jr., Mr. James E. West, Miss Edith C. Westcott, and Dr. D. E. Wiber.

The members of this board have given much of their time, without compensation, in behalf of children's playgrounds. They have the good will and confidence of the entire community. Some of the most successful business men of the city are identified with this organization. They have insisted upon sound business administration in every detail. Each year a detailed report has been rendered, showing the receipts and expenditures of all moneys. These reports have been furnished to the press, mailed to every contributor and District official, and for the last two years have been mailed to the Members of the House of Representatives. I find the following statement in a little booklet issued in 1907, which was sent broadcast by the Playgrounds Association:

What was done with the appropriation for 1907–8.

The appropriation contained three items—$1,500 for school playgrounds, $75,000 for the purchase of sites for municipal playgrounds, $5,000 for the maintenance of municipal playgrounds.

The $1,500 was expended in paying the teachers and janitors. It covered only about one-third of the expenses of the school playgrounds.

The $75,000 was expended as follows: Thirty-one thousand dollars for the Rosedale playground; $14,000 for the Cardoza playground; $27,868.25 for the Georgetown playground; recording fees, $3.45; total, $72,871.70; leaving an unexpended balance of $2,128.30.

The $5,000 for the maintenance of playgrounds has been expended as follows:

All of these reports have been carefully audited and show in full detail how the people's money has been expended.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in charge of the bill stated he had sought to know where the money of the people went, and had said to some of these people:

When you get an organized body of men to whom reports can be made and who can make a detailed statement of your expenditures year by year and what for, then we will be ready to report on an appropriation for this purpose.

Under date of December 10, 1909, the Washington Playground Association requested official control of playground work in the city of Washington, and addressed the following communication to the District Commisioners, clearly setting forth the proposition:

DECEMBER 10, 1909.

BOARD OF DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: At a meeting of the board of directors of the Washington Playgrounds Association held Monday, December 21, 1908, a report of the special committee which had carefully considered the welfare of the association recommended as follows:

"Your committee believes that whenever the Government is called upon to and does contribute the larger share of the expenses, the management of the municipal playgrounds should be placed under official control."

This recommendation was unanimously agreed to.

Since organized it has been the purpose of the Playground Association to so develop the work and prove its merits and efficiency as to warrant its support by congressional appropriation under official management. Inasmuch as Congress is now being called upon to appropriate the larger part of the amount estimated as necessary to properly maintain the municipal playgrounds for 1910, it is the sense of the officers and board of directors of the association that this is the opportune time for the association to also seek official control.

Therefore you are respectfully urged to recommend to Congress, in connection with the granting of the playground appropriation, the enactment of legislation providing for the appointment by the District Commissioners of a playground commission of five (or seven) persons along lines similar to commissions now in charge of playground work in most of our large cities, this commission to be provided with an executive officer, to be selected by the members thereof and to have direct charge of the administration of all playgrounds.

The conditions in Washington are such as to make very desirable the creation of such a commission. Under authority of Congress the engineer in charge of public buildings and grounds has for some years allowed the use of certain government reservations upon which some of the most profitable and successful playgrounds have been operated. The board of education has always heartily cooperated in arranging for the use of school property, to the end that more children might be given the advantages of the playgrounds. The Playground Association is made up of those who give their time and means voluntarily and has worked with the other two agencies in bringing about the extensive playground system now in operation. The playground commission, legally provided for, could be so constituted as to represent all the interests involved in the city, and thus secure one central form of organization, which would doubtless more expeditiously and efficiently administer and further develop the playgrounds for the children of the city of Washington.

The foregoing is respectfully submitted on behalf of the Washington Playground Association in accordance with the action of the board of directors at a meeting held December 9, 1909.

Very respectfully,

ARTHUR C. MOSES, Vice-President.

JAMES E. WEST, Secretary.

The District Commissioners, I am informed, in due time forwarded this communication, with approval, to the Appropriation Committee. I am at a loss to see how the Playground Association could have done more.

On several occasions, when it has been necessary for me to appear before the members of the Appropriation Committee or on the floor of the House in regard to playgrounds, I have been struck with the feeling of the committee in regard to this particular item, when, upon representations made in regard to other matters of equal but no greater importance I have always been met with the great desire on the part of the Appropriation Committee to do everything that appertained to fair treatmen in regard to educational matters.

For instance, while the District of Columbia appropriation bill was before the committee I brought a matter to their attention in regard to the apparent unjust treatment that had been accorded to the colored schools in the District as compared with the white schools, and at my suggestion a direct change was made in the estimate by the then commissioners and inserted in the appropriation bill.

The following table shows the result of the appropriation contained in this District bill for the white schools and the colored schools, all of which will be paid in the usual manner, as provided in the organic act of 1878—one half by the Govment and the other half by the District.

For construction of a manual training school on grounds of Cardoza School	40,000
		193,000
For central heating plant for M Street High School, the Abby Simmons School, and the Douglass School	30,000
Additional amount for repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds, etc	30,000
Grand total		599,000

This table shows that the colored schools receive of this entire appropriation 35 per cent plus, and this exclusive of $30,000 appropriated for heating plant and $30,000 for repairs.

I do not see why the committee should differentiate between the item above referred to and this one under present discussion.

The $17,000 asked for in this bill for children's playgrounds in the city of Washington is insignificant as compared with the sum spent in most of our large cities, as is shown in the following table.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] five minutes.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, in urging on Congress the adoption of the playground movement, those who are interested in it are asking only to have taken up a plan of education which has been looked into, and which to-day is as much a part of the educational system of the cities in our country as schools, and as providing for them books and teachers. We have heard here criticisms as to the disposition of certain money which was appropriated by Congress. It is admitted that there has been an insufficient appropriation to care for the playgrounds, and that private subscriptions made up the necessary balance. Therefore, whether the man who takes charge of the playgrounds is paid from the money which Congress appropriates, or whether he is paid from the part of the total which is raised by private subscription, can make no difference. It could be only a question of his doing his work properly, and that is something which the people who employ him are presumably better able to judge than we are.

From the cities from which statistics could be secured, 184 cities in this country gave last year $1,300,000 in the aggregate to be used strictly for children's playgrounds within their limits. New York maintains for children 261 public playgrounds. Chicago maintains 29. Philadelphia maintains 73. Boston maintains 77. Baltimore maintains 50, and Pittsburg 28, and all the other cities who pretend to keep up to the modern steps of progress provide playgrounds as a part of the school system.

So great in fact has the confidence in playgrounds become in the State from which I am sent, that two years ago a statute was passed which submitted to all the municipalities in Massachusetts the question whether they would adopt an act which provided that each city which adopted it should maintain playgrounds. That went to a popular vote or referendum, and it was passed by 40 cities and towns. Of these 40 cities 38 voted in favor of adopting a law which provided for playgrounds for the city, and in only 2 of them was the law defeated, and that by a small vote, owing to local pecuniary conditions.

The popular vote in Massachusetts where this question of the adoption of playgrounds was submitted resulted in 153,651 people voting for the taking up by the city of this form of education, and but 34,284 people voting against it, and many of them doubtless for local financial conditions.

I believe that the people of the District of Columbia have the same desire to see their children properly educated, and have the same regard for their health as the citizens of Massachusetts. I believe that if an act similar to that passed in Massachusetts could be submitted to the citizens of the District of Columbia there would be no doubt that they would vote to adopt it. I believe that were we legislating for the people at home we would pay far greater heed to this demand for proper treatment of the children than we do here. Shall we deny to Washington a system almost as necessary and universal as the public schools because, lacking local self-government, they can not force us to grant it? If we were providing for the children of our constituents who sent us here, we would not give their wishes so little heed. It has been known that our public-school system in certain parts of the country was protested against when it was first begun. Yet, would any man to-day dare to say that that public-school system of America is not one of the greatest bulwarks we have? I urge on the Members of this body to extend and strengthen the work which the public schools are doing for the children by making provision for children's playgrounds in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-three minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the House, when we had this question under consideration, voted by unanimous consent not only to appropriate $17,000 for the equipment and maintenance of playgrounds within the District of Columbia, but by unanimous consent we voted that the appropriation should be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia. The appropriation is for the benefit of the citizens of the District of Columbia. There is no claim whatever that the Government of the United States is justified in expending from its Federal Treasury a dollar for a purpose of this kind. So far as the government contribution to playgrounds is concerned, it is infinitely more than the area contributed by any city in the United States for that purpose. I want to read, for the information of the committee, from the testimony of Colonel Cosby before the Committee on Appropriations only last week.

The question arose in regard to the use of public parks in this city, and all of these public parks are under the control of the superintendent of buildings and grounds. Colonel Cosby said:

Mr. SHERLEY. As to the grounds around the Monument, there are quite a number of baseball fields there?

Colonel COSBY. Eight baseball fields; yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. What regulations are made by you as to the use of those ball fields?

Colonel COSBY. We require people who wish to use them to make application beforehand to the office. Before the beginning of each month in the spring and summer we go over all of the applications and allot those eight fields for every afternoon, excepting Sundays, during the coming month to the applicants.

Mr. SHERLEY. Are any of those eight baseball fields left open for the small boys who get up voluntary games of ball, or are they distributed practically among associations or teams of grown men in the various departments of the Government, and to other organizations?

Colonel COSBY. Several of the fields are, so far as possible, kept for teams composed of small boys, and several of the other fields are kept for the larger teams. As to the White Lot, for instance, we allot the grounds entirely to the Departmental League, and to uniformed teams, who are competing for pennants and who compete among themselves for various things. On the other hand, the baseball grounds to the north of the Monument are reserved, so far as possible, for small boys, but we have more applications during the spring months than we can possibly fill for those eight fields for every afternoon.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much of the grounds do these ball fields take up?

Colonel COSBY. I can show you on the map just where these fields are.

Mr. SHERLEY. Please name the streets and the locations, if you can.

Colonel COSBY. On the White Lot, on north B street, just north of the Monument Grounds; we hope to get one or two additional fields also on the portion of north B street between Sixteenth street extended and Seventeenth street; and we also have one field to the west of Seventeenth street.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, do those fields occupy all of the space indicated?

Colonel COSBY. Only part of the space within those squares. They occupy all of the space within those squares that we can allot for baseball fields without their interfering with one another.

Mr. SHERLEY. But is there also space where children, for instance, could play, even though the fields were being used?

Colonel COSBY. At the present time there is no good space, and that is one of the things I hope to be able to get enough ground for if our improvements this year permit it. At the same time it is very difficult to have a field of that kind. There are so many teams, so many people here who wish to play baseball, that unless we actually give permission to certain teams to play on a particular afternoon, there will be fights and all sorts of disorder in attempting to get hold of that field.

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not necessarily follow that you must give up too much of these grounds to the use of 18 men playing in lieu of the use that could be made of it by hundreds of children?

Colonel COSBY. Oh, these baseball fields do not interfere with the use of the parks and grounds as playgrounds.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what I am getting at. Is there not plenty of room between the fields, not sufficient for a new ball field, but sufficient to allow plenty of room for use of children in playing?

Colonel COSBY. Oh, ample; and we contemplate the increase of the grounds—that is, the amount of ground that will be available for playgrounds for general purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. And what is true as to spaces for children to play is also true in all of these parks?

Colonel COSBY. It is; in all the parks the children can play. In none of the parks outside of this large one do we allot ground for baseball.

Mr. SHERLEY. Those parks are pretty well scattered over the city, are they not?

Colonel COSBY. They are thoroughly scattered over the built-up portion of the city—that is, over the greater portion of the city within what were the old city limits, bounded by Florida avenue.

Mr. SHERLEY. But in the more congested part of the city?

Colonel COSBY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand you, then, Colonel, that these fields, in the White Lot and in the vicinity of the Monument, are not the only parks or open spaces that can be and are utilized by the children for baseball or other play?

Colonel COSBY. They are practically the only parts of the public parks that are used for baseball, but all of the parks are used for playgrounds.

The CHAIRMAN. By the larger boys and by men?

Colonel COSBY. In the other playgrounds the children will get up games among themselves—that is, many of the little children—but those are the only parks large enough for regular games of baseball.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much of the total area that is open to the public of the Monument grounds are given up to baseball; the percentage?

Colonel COSBY. I have never estimated the exact amount, but what we have given up is practically this irregular rectangle. All the rest is open to the public.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly the major portion is not given up for baseball teams?

Colonel COSBY. I should say that less than a quarter is given up for baseball teams.

The CHAIRMAN. Colonel, is Garfield Park available for baseball, too?

Colonel COSBY. Garfield Park is one of the parks which we turned over, partially, to the Playgrounds Association for a public playgrounds, and they have put up apparatus for small children to play with, and I think they have baseball games among the small children. Whether they are games that require the regular diamond, with the amount of land that that involves, or not, I am not sure.

The CHAIRMAN. It is available for that purpose; there is not any rule or regulation that would prevent them from utilizing that park?

Colonel COSBY. Nothing whatever. The Playgrounds Association have to keep a representative there while the playgrounds are open to the children, and if they choose to get up games of baseball they are perfectly at liberty to do so.

Mr. SHERLEY. In addition to these particular parks mentioned in the bill, there are quite a number of squares, like Dupont Circle, and other triangles in the city. What regulations, if any, are there prohibiting the public from walking upon the grass of those squares in places?

Colonel COSBY. The only regulations are those which we have every now and then for the protection of a particular part of some park.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is, temporary regulations while you are there resodding or planting?

Colonel COSBY. Yes; planting or reconstructing in some way.

Mr. SHERLEY. During the rest of the year, but generally, they are open for people to use?

Colonel COSBY. Yes; for people to use, provided they will not destroy the flowers and plants. We keep watchmen there who are directed to keep strict watch upon that.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no objection to children running over the grass?

Colonel COSBY. On the contrary, I have directed all of my assistants and watchmen to give it out, so that it may be generally understood, that the children are expected to go on the grass.

Mr. SHERLEY. In point of fact, at Dupont Circle and at Lafayette Park the children do, in very great numbers, use these spaces, do they not?

Colonel COSBY. I think anyone in passing would see them running all over the parks at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Colonel, what is the area of Garfield Park?

Colonel COSBY. Twenty-four acres.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having made available for playground purposes all of these parks, amounting in the aggregate to 773 acres, within the congested portion of this city, if there is any congested portion, I say that Congress has done more for the city of Washington in the matter of playgrounds and affording opportunities and facilities for children to play than any city in the Union has done for playgrounds, and for the use of the children of these cities. Having provided these opportunities for play, we also maintain, half from the Treasury of the United States and one-half from the District revenues, 24 additional playgrounds in connection with the schools of this city. Therefore, there is no justification for appropriating another dollar from the Federal Treasury for the support of additional playgrounds. If the citizens of Washington want any additional playgrounds for the benefit of their children, let them pay the cost of maintaining and supervising these playgrounds from their own revenues, rather than from the revenues of the Federal Government, and that, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. And that, Mr. Speaker, is what this House agreed to unanimously—I decline to yield. When the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] took the floor to address the House on this proposition he said that he would be perfectly willing to make the whole of the appropriation payable from the revenues of the District, I asked him if he meant what he said and he said he did. I then asked him if he would agree to the amendment which I then offered, and he did agree to it, and the House adopted the amendment, making the whole of this appropriation payable from the revenues of the District government, and I say now that these friends of playgrounds ought to be held to their voluntary agreement.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, if I rose for no other purpose, it would be to correct some statements made in the hearings upon this subject, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] to this statement. I read from the hearings:

Mr. BURLESON. Let me ask you how much do you suppose Cincinnati expended last year on playgrounds. That is the city in which President Taft lives, and to whom you refer as so earnestly advocating playgrounds in his message.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; and I think Cincinnati has been deplorably deficient.

Mr. BURLESON. The amount of money expended is zero, according to this tabulated statement, etc.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the gentleman from Texas that he has been most grievously misinformed. In fact, I think it would be well for him to go to Cincinnati and see a really civilized center, where we have appropriated in the last few years more than $600,000 for children's playgrounds [applause], and where only this year we appropriated $20,000 for their maintenance.

Mr. BURLESON. On whose authority does the gentleman make that statement?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I make that statement on my own authority, as opposed to that of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURLESON. Who gave the gentleman the information?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that I have lived in Cincinnati all of my life. I do not know the conditions in the gentleman's district, and I assume that the gentleman is not acquainted with those in mine.

Mr. BURLESON. We had our information from the Census Bureau.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then the gentleman evidently was unable to read that portion of the census report. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to correct some misapprehensions. Each time this playground matter has come up there has been an attempt to obscure the real merits by talking about a certain man who got $2,400. Now, the fact is that of the three appropriations we have made only one of them contained the word "supervision," and that was joined with other words. The words "maintenance, equipment, and supervision" were joined together, and the amount was $5,000, but the amount expended on the playgrounds was much more than the $5,000, and was raised by public subscription. Now, if anybody is worried by the fact that this gentleman was employed, I hope he will be quieted when he knows that he is no longer employed, and he has not been employed this year. It is true that considerable of this money will go for supervision. Why? The gentleman from Minnesota says that Colonel Cosby says that there are 770 acres in the District of Columbia that can be used in playgrounds——

Mr. TAWNEY. That are used.

Mr. PARSONS. No; no.

Mr. TAWNEY. That are used; not can be.

Mr. PARSONS. But the gentleman from Minnesota did not say that the Playground Association can not get any of these acres set aside for playground purposes unless they will consent to certain conditions, and I will read the conditions from Colonel Cosby's letter.

And I will say by way of introduction, that the last time this matter was up, if we had debated it a surprise was to be sprung upon us and we were to be shown that a lot of citizens objected to these playgrounds. It is true that in a certain locality certain citizens did object to playgrounds, but five-sixths of those objecting did not have any children, and of those who did have children five-sixths wanted playgrounds in front of their houses. Colonel Cosby said that the difficulty came from a lack of supervision. I will read from his letter:

It is believed that nearly, if not all of the abuses complained of were due to the fact that the playgrounds were not under proper supervision.

Then he went on and said:

Permission is hereby granted your association for the temporary use of the three reservations mentioned as playgrounds under the following regulations:

First. For each playground one or more watchmen must be employed by you, at least one of whom must always be on duty on the ground from 6 a. m. until midnight. The watchmen must be men of good reputation, and be commissioned as special policemen by the superintendent of the Metropolitan force. They shall be held responsible that the rules and regulations are enforced.

I will pass over some of the rules and regulations and come down to the fourth, regarding the conduct and use of these 773 acres:

Fourth. In addition to the watchman, at least one efficient supervisor shall be on each playground during the hours of play.

Now that brings the question right up squarely before the House. If you are going to have playgrounds you have to have supervision, and if you want playgrounds then vote for the amendment which puts in supervision——

Mr. TAWNEY. Is not there an appropriation of $26,000 in the sundry civil bill for this supervision for which they ask $5,000 more in the next fiscal year, and I have this statement here of Colonel Cosby as to what the conditions are——

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I will not yield——

Mr. TAWNEY. And I would say——

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield. Mr. Speaker, in the matter of playgrounds, I have learned to fear the Greeks bearing gifts. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes remains.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I understand the motion is to recede and concur?

The SPEAKER. To recede and concur.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that motion is divisible.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, the gentleman from Michigan asks for a division of the question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And on the motion to recede I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. A division of the question having been demanded, the vote will be first taken upon the motion to recede, and the gentleman from Michigan demands the previous question on the motion to recede.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a division of the question is in submitting the vote, I take it. I do not understand there can be a division of the question for the purpose of making a motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. You can not make two motions, if objection is made, one on top of another.

Mr. MANN. But there is a motion made, and that motion is subject to a division, and can that be divided for the purpose of moving the previous question?

The SPEAKER. On either branch of it, yes, undoubtedly. The gentleman will see at once if the previous question is ordered on both, that would shut off an amendment on both, and yet the gentleman ought to have the chance to stop debate on one without cutting off an opportunity for amendment on the other.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede from the House disagreement to the Senate amendments numbered 74 and 75.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 95, noes 93.

Mr. TAWNEY. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 142, answered "present" 14, not voting 121, as follows:

Whereas there are thousands of acres of valuable lands in this State which are unproductive because of insufficient drainage, and which can be made productive by deepening the channels of streams and by digging canals through swamps, which would also add greatly to the health of our citizens who live on these streams and swamps: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of delegates (the senate concurring), That our Representatives and Senators in the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to take such steps as may be necessary to have the Government send experts into this State, who shall inspect these unproductive lands, especially in the section known as Tidewater Virginia, and report the probable number of acres which can be reclaimed, where located, and the probable cost of reclaiming the same.

PRICES AND WAGES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to ask for a reprint of Senate Document No. 355, Twenty-fourth Congress, first session.

I venture to say that I think this document will be of some interest at the present time in connection with the matter of prices and wages. It was brought to my attention yesterday. It is a report of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to an increase in the salaries of clerks, owing to the great advance in the cost of living at that time. In the report there is embodied a transcript from the account book of a clerk, showing his expenditures from day to day. Several articles are grouped together, so that it is very difficult to determine what he paid for each article, but there are some items which I think it will be found to be of great interest to compare with certain prices. For example, he was paying 14 cents a pound for sugar and $8 a barrel for flour. He was paying $1 a gallon for illuminating oil, and he was paying 75 cents a day to a laborer for a day's work.

I think the document, in connection with the present inquiry, will be found to be of very general interest.

Mr. CLAPP. How many years ago was the report made?

Mr. LODGE. In 1836.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator is not speaking from memory?

Mr. LODGE. I am speaking from the printed report—Senate Document No. 355 of the Twenty-fourth Congress.

Mr. BACON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that at the same time it cost 10 cents a mile to travel, whereas now one can travel for 2 cents a mile, in addition to like changes all along the line.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 300 copies of Senate Document No. 355, Twenty-fourth Congress, first session, report from the Secretary of the Treasury, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, relative to increase of the salaries of clerks, etc., be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6662) to authorize the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River in the neighborhood of Sibley, Mo., and to remove the existing structure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the words "Missouri River," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation," so as to read:

That the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with its railway, and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, a new bridge across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in the neighborhood of Sibley, Mo., and in the vicinity of its existing bridge now constructed and mantained under authority of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, chapter 349.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the words "chapter 349," to strike out the remainder of the section and to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the superstructure and piers of the existing bridge shall be completely removed down to a plane of 15 feet below standard low water within one year from the date of completion of the new bridge herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 10, line 6, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "sixteen" and insert "twenty," so as to read:

The name of Ella Palmer, widow of Frank Palmer, late second lieutenant Company D, Eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, may I inquire if I am correct in supposing that this is not the bill which extends pensions to the widows of soldiers married since 1890?

Mr. McCUMBER. My attention was engaged for the moment and I did not hear the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. I wish to be certain that this bill is not the bill which extends the right to pensions to the widows of soldiers married since 1890.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not. That bill is now on the calendar. This is an omnibus——

Mr. ROOT. When that bill comes up for consideration, I hope that it will not be acted upon without my having an opportunity to express my opposition to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator that this bill is simply an omnibus bill gathering together several of the private pension bills. When the other bill comes up I should like to have the Senator present, of course.

On page 12, line 16, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty," so as to read:

The name of Lewis J. Laws, late of Company E, One hundred and eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 21419. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives in reference to the District of Columbia appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 14464) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, insisting on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate for a moment, I desire to make a statement as to the reasons for the rejection on the part of the other body of the conference report.

When the bill came to the Senate there was an item in it appropriating $17,000 for playgrounds in the city of Washington, to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and there was no provision in it for supervision. The so-called "organic act," which Congress is responsible for, provides that in all matters of appropriation relating to the District of Columbia there shall be an equal division from the revenues of the District and the Treasury of the United States, and so far as I know—in fact, I speak from actual knowledge—during my somewhat extended service in this body, there has never been a violation of that well-established principle. As to the wisdom of it I have nothing to say, contenting myself with the statement that Congress is responsible for it, and the conferees on the part of the Senate felt that there ought not to be any deviation from the provisions of the law.

As a result, the Senate amended the House bill by striking out the words "to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia," and also inserted the word "supervision." The conferees could not be brought together on those points of difference, and finally the conclusion was reached that it might be well to strike the entire item from the bill, which was done.

It was held in the other body, and very likely properly held, that the conferees exceeded their authority in striking from the bill the appropriation, as that was not in controversy, and the bill has been sent back largely because of that fact, and also because, as I understand the matter, the House did not agree to the insertion of the word "supervision."

Now, Mr. President, the conference report has come back, and the conferees will take up that question anew, and I trust they may be able to adjust it.

I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. FOSTER the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

HOT SPRINGS STREET RAILWAY.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From the Committee on Public Lands, on behalf of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], I report back without amendment the bill (H. R. 13899) granting unto the Hot Springs Street Railway Company, its successors and assigns, the right to maintain and operate its electric railway along the southern border of that portion of the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, known as the "Whittington Lake Reserve Park," and I submit a report (No. 359) thereon.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

STATUE OF EX-GOVERNOR FRANCIS H. PIERPONT.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that on April 2 I would ask the Senate to engage in exercises appropriate to the reception of the statue of ex-Governor Francis H. Pierpont from the State of West Virginia. I observe on the calendar this morning that there are to be two series of eulogies delivered on that day, and I wish to change the date of those exercises from April 2 to April 9.

FIRE INSURANCE CLAIMS IN HAWAII.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3806) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order has been asked for, which is the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not insist on calling for the regular order if the Senator from South Dakota has a bill which he wishes to have considered, but after that is disposed of I will ask that the calendar be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, if the Senate will permit me, I will state that the claim of these several insurance companies was not embraced in the original settlement of claims growing out of the destruction of property in Honolulu to prevent the spread of the bubonic plague, because it was referred to the court to have certain questions as to the liability of the companies under these insurance policies settled.

It seems that in 1899 the bubonic plague broke out in Honolulu, and the government authorities ordered a large amount of property destroyed, and afterwards settled all of the claims except these, paying some million and a half dollars for that purpose. These policies had certain clauses of exemption, which had to be construed by the courts. The companies were sued in test cases and found to be liable and made these payments.

This bill, I think, passed the Senate at a previous session. It was referred to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who took the proof and made a favorable report, and a unanimous report in favor of the bill was laid before the Senate. The holders of these claims have presented vouchers showing payment in full to the policy holders of the amount provided for in this bill, except that no interest and no costs are allowed—simply the face of the policy.

Mr. CULLOM. I will inquire of the Senator if there is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is a full report showing all the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from South Dakota to allow the bill to go over. I have written for some papers and information in regard to the claim, which I have not yet received, and I ask the Senator kindly to let it go over.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have no objection, if the Senator requests it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill goes over. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the first three bills on the calendar go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill and the two succeeding bills, the bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property, and the bill (H. R. 12316) to provide for the government of the Canal Zone, the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5485) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawal of areas of public land pending report and recommendation to Congress or for examination and classification was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks that this bill also may go over. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 530) to amend an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto, so as to extend the benefits thereof to the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. This bill has been reached quite a number of times, Mr. President, but has gone over. The last time it was reached, the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] asked that it should go over. The Senator is present. I will ask him if he has any objection to considering the bill at this time.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have been ill practically every day since, and I ask that it may go over for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill will go over, then, at the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The bill (S. 6058) amending section 2 of an act entitled "An act to increase the pensions of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war," approved April 19, 1908, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2430) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5715) providing for the establishment of building lines and special building restrictions in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN HAWAII.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 80) providing for a special election in the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This joint resolution was read in full on the 1st day of March.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust the joint resolution will be now acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I think we ought to have such bills and joint resolutions read when taken up.

Mr. CLAY. Has the joint resolution been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution, as the Chair has stated, was read on the 1st of March.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be read again, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this is the first appearance of an initiative and referendum joint resolution in this body or in either House of Congress. I think we are starting out upon an entirely new trail in legislation by Congress authorizing the holding of an election to instruct a legislature, leaving no option at all to that body in legislating upon this subject. It strikes me that a question of this kind, or the initiation of this class of legislation, should receive very thorough consideration if we are to authorize in all jurisdictions over which we exercise direct control the people to hold elections and instruct in the performance of their duty the legislature that we have created and conferred powers upon. It is a pretty big question, and it ought not to be considered under Rule VIII. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. But I shall not, of course, if any Senator desires to make any suggestion, ask that the joint resolution now go over.

Mr. CLAPP. The only suggestion I wish to make is that this joint resolution came in the form of a proposition for Congress to legislate upon this subject directly. After much consideration it was finally decided to refer the matter to the people of those islands. I do not see that there is any great innovation about it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in reply I will say that it goes further than that. I should favor a law that would allow those people to vote upon it, but I never should favor a law that would allow those people at such an election to take from the legislative body that we have created the jurisdiction and the right to perform the duties of legislation according to their conscience, intelligence, and ability.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to say that there was a hearing before the committee, and after very careful consideration this joint resolution was agreed upon by the representatives of the temperance people and also by the Delegate from Hawaii. Since that time its enactment has been requested by the governor and other officials of the Territory. The question is simply one for them to settle by a majority vote as to whether or not they will prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor except for the purposes mentioned in the joint resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I give due credit to the report of the committee. I have no doubt that they have investigated the matter thoroughly, and I am not at all inclined to criticise their conclusion; but the matter has now passed from the jurisdiction of the committee to that of the Senate; and it is out of no lack of respect for the committee or for its conclusion that I make these suggestions, which are entirely appropriate in this body when we are considering the action of any committee.

I would not at all object to this measure if it authorized the legislature to submit this question to a vote of the people; my sympathies are not against the purposes sought to be obtained by this legislation, but they are all against the enactment or recognition of the proposed initiative and referendum emanating from Congress to the people. We have too much of that outside of Congress. Let us not have it here, because it is not in conformity with the plan of our Government or with its organic Constitution. We should not be the ones to send it out with our approval. Let this joint resolution provide that the legislature shall submit this question to the people, but not that the people shall instruct the legislature. That is no part of the function of the people either under the laws organizing the government of Hawaii or under any other principle of our law.

Now, I wish merely to call the Senators' attention to this language, found on page 1, in lines 14 and 15, of the joint resolution. The question to be submitted is:

> Shall the legislature to be elected in November, 1910, be instructed to pass, at its first regular session, a law—

Instructed to pass a law. A legislative body that takes an oath to act on its own conscience and judgment shall be instructed to waive it at the instance of an outside body.

Mr. CURTIS. That would simply be an instruction.

Mr. HEYBURN. It says so.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator who prepared the joint resolution is not present, and I hope my friend will not insist that it go over under Rule IX.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. CLAPP. Let it go over without going under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution goes over without prejudice.

RESURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 116) to amend an act to correct chapter 271 of volume 35, United States Statutes at Large, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to this joint resolution.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would inquire of the Senator from Wyoming whether he desires to press the joint resolution at this time?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The very purpose of my calling the attention of the Senator from Idaho was that I did not desire to press it, if he desired to have it go over. He made objection to it the other day, and I did not want it brought up if the Senator objected.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like at this time, before taking up the measure, to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming whether or not the status is not something like this: This was a provision in an appropriation bill, was it not?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; it was not a provision in an appropriation bill; it was a special act.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then the act will remain in force until Congress shall act upon it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It will. It was a special act, chapter 271, found in that particular volume, and it involves only this particular thing. The Senator will remember that if it had been an appropriation bill the conferees would have been members of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I merely asked for information.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But, as a matter of fact, they were composed of members of the Committees on Public Lands of the two Houses.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should not like to have the joint resolution taken up to-day; and I will ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

COURT OF COMMERCE, ETC.

The bill (S. 6737) to create a court of commerce and to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the bill be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a court of the United States is hereby created which shall be known as the United States court of commerce (hereinafter referred to as the court of commerce) and shall have jurisdiction over all cases of the following kinds:

First. All cases for the enforcement, otherwise than by adjudication and collection of a forfeiture or penalty or by infliction of criminal punishment, of any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission other than for the payment of money.

Second. Cases brought to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend in whole or in part any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Third. Such cases as by section 3 of the act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States, approved February 19, 1903, are authorized to be maintained in a circuit court of the United States.

Fourth. All such mandamus proceedings as under the provisions of section 20 or section 23 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, are authorized to be maintained in a circuit court of the United States.

The original jurisdiction of the court of commerce over cases of the foregoing classes shall be exclusive; but this act shall not affect the jurisdiction now possessed by any circuit or district court of the United States over cases or proceedings of a kind not within the above-enumerated classes.

The court of commerce shall be a court of record, and shall have a seal of such form and style as the court may prescribe. The said court shall be composed of five judges, to be from time to time designated and assigned thereto by the Chief Justice of the United States from among the circuit judges of the United States, for the period of five years, except that in the first instance the court shall be composed of the five additional circuit judges to be appointed as hereinafter provided, who shall be designated by the President to serve for one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, in order that the period of designation of one of the said judges shall expire in each year thereafter; in case of the death, resignation, or termination of assignment of any judge so designated, the Chief Justice shall designate a circuit judge to fill the vacancy so caused and to serve during the unexpired period for which the original designation was made. After the year 1914, no circuit judge shall be redesignated to serve on the court of commerce until the expiration of at least one year after the expiration of the period of his last previous designation. The judge first designated for the five-year period shall be the presiding judge of said court, and thereafter the judge senior in commission shall be the presiding judge.

Each of the judges during the period of his service in the commerce court shall, on account of the regular sessions of the court being held in the city of Washington, receive in addition to his salary as circuit judge an expense allowance at the rate of $3,000 per annum. The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint five additional circuit judges, no two of whom shall be from the same judicial circuit, who shall hold office during good behavior and who shall be from time to time designated and assigned by the Chief Justice of the United States for service in the circuit court for any district, or the circuit court of appeals for any circuit, or in the court of commerce. The additional judges so to be appointed shall receive the like pay and emolument as now are or shall be provided by law for circuit judges.

The associate judges shall have precedence and shall succeed to the place and powers of the presiding judge whenever he may be absent or incapable of acting in the order of the date of their commissions. Four of said judges shall constitute a quorum, and at least a majority of the court shall concur in all decisions.

The court shall also have a clerk and a marshal, with the same duties and powers, so far as they may be appropriate and are not altered by rule of the court, as are now possessed by the clerk and marshal, respectively, of the Supreme Court of the United States. The offices of the clerk and marshal of the court shall be in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia. The judges of the court shall appoint the clerk and marshal, and may also appoint, if they find it necessary, a deputy clerk and deputy marshal; and such clerk, marshal, deputy clerk, and deputy marshal shall hold office during the pleasure of the court. The salary of the clerk shall be $4,000 per annum; the salary of the marshal $5,000 per annum; the salary of the deputy clerk $2,500 per annum; and the salary of the deputy marshal $2,500 per annum. The said clerk and marshal may, with the approval of the court, employ all requisite assistance. The costs and fees in said court shall be established by the court in a table thereof, approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, within four months after the organization of the court; but such costs and fees shall in no case exceed those charged in the Supreme Court of the United States, and shall be accounted for and paid to the Treasury Department of the United States.

The court of commerce shall be always open for the transaction of business. Its regular sessions shall be held in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; but the powers of the court or of any judge thereof, or of the clerk, marshal, deputy clerk, or deputy marshal may be exercised anywhere in the United States; and for expedition of the work of the court and the avoidance of undue expense or inconvenience to suitors the court shall hold sessions in different parts of the United States as may be found desirable. The actual and necessary expenses of the judges, clerk, marshal, deputy clerk, and deputy marshal of the court incurred for travel and attendance elsewhere than in the city of Washington shall be paid upon the written and itemized certificate of such judge, clerk, marshal, deputy clerk, or deputy marshal by the marshal of the court, and shall be allowed to him in the statement of his accounts with the United States.

The United States marshals of the several districts outside of the city of Washington in which the court of commerce may hold its sessions shall provide, under the direction and with the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States, such rooms in the public buildings of the United States as may be necessary for the court's use; but in case proper rooms can not be provided in such public buildings, said marshals, with the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States, may then lease from time to time other necessary rooms for the court.

If, at any time, the business of the court of commerce does not require the services of all the judges, the Chief Justice of the United States may, by writing, signed by him and filed in the Department of State, terminate the assignment of any of the judges or temporarily assign him for service in any circuit court or circuit court of appeals. In case of illness or other disability of any judge assigned to the court of commerce, the Chief Justice of the United States may assign any other circuit judge of the United States to act in his place, and may terminate such assignment when the exigence therefor shall cease; and any circuit judge so assigned to act in place of such judge shall, during his assignment, exercise all the powers and perform all the functions of such judge.

In all cases within its jurisdiction the court of commerce, and each of the judges assigned thereto, shall, respectively, have and may exercise any and all of the powers of a circuit court of the United States and of the judges of said court, respectively, so far as the same may be appropriate to the effective exercise of the jurisdiction hereby conferred. The court of commerce may issue all writs and process appropriate to the full exercise of its jurisdiction and powers and may prescribe the form thereof. It may also, from time to time, establish such rules or regulations concerning pleading, practice, or procedure in cases or matters within its jurisdiction as to the court shall seem wise and proper. Its orders, writs, and process may run, be served, and be returnable anywhere in the United States; and the marshal and deputy marshal of said court and also the United States marshals and deputy marshals in the several districts of the United States shall have like powers and be under like duties to act for and in behalf of said court as pertain to United States marshals and deputy marshals generally when acting under like conditions concerning suits or matters in the circuits of the United States.

The jurisdiction of the court of commerce shall be invoked by filing in the office of the clerk of the court a written petition setting forth briefly and succinctly the facts constituting the petitioner's cause of action and specifying the relief sought. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served by the marshal or a deputy marshal of the court of commerce or by the proper United States marshal or deputy marshal upon every defendant therein named, and when the United States is a party defendant the service shall be made by filing a copy of said petition in the office of the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission and in the Department of Justice. Within thirty days after the petition is served, unless that time is extended by order of the court or a judge thereof, an answer to the petition shall be filed in the clerk's office and a copy thereof mailed to the petitioner's attorney, which answer shall briefly and categorically respond to the allegations of the petition. No replication need be filed to the answer, and objections to the sufficiency of the petition or answer as not setting forth a cause of action or defense must be taken at the final hearing or by motion to dismiss the petition based on said grounds, which motion may be made at any time before answer is filed. In case no answer shall be filed as provided herein the petitioner may apply to the court on notice for such relief as may be proper upon the facts alleged in the petition. The court may, by rule, prescribe the method of taking evidence in cases pending in said court, and may prescribe that the evidence be taken before a single judge of the court, with power to rule upon the admission of evidence. Except as may be otherwise provided in this act, or by rule of the court, the practice and procedure in the court of commerce shall conform as nearly as may be to that in like cases in a circuit court of the United States.

The judges of the court of commerce shall be designated by the Chief Justice of the United States within ninety days after the passage of this act, and the court shall be open for the transaction of business at a date to be fixed by order of the said court, which shall be not later than thirty days after the judges thereof shall have been so designated.

SEC. 2. That a final judgment or decree of the court of commerce may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States if appeal to the Supreme Court is taken by an aggrieved party within sixty days after the entry of said final judgment or decree. Such appeal may be taken in like manner as appeals from a circuit court of the United States to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court may affirm, reverse, or modify the final judgment or decree of the court of commerce, as the case may require.

Appeal to the Supreme Court, however, shall in no case supersede or stay the judgment or decree of the court of commerce appealed from, unless the Supreme Court or a justice thereof shall so direct, and appellant shall give bond in such form and of such amount as the Supreme Court, or the justice of that court allowing the stay, may require.

Appeals to the Supreme Court under this section shall have priority in hearing and determination over all other causes except criminal causes in that court.

SEC. 3. That suits to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be brought in the court of commerce against the United States. The pendency of such suit shall not of itself stay or suspend the operation of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but the court of commerce, in its discretion, may restrain or suspend in whole or in part the operation of the commission's order pending the final hearing and determination of the suit. No order or injunction so restraining or suspending an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be made by the court of commerce otherwise than upon notice and after hearing, except that in cases where irreparable damage would otherwise ensue to the petitioner said court or a judge thereof may allow a temporary stay or suspension in whole or in part of the operation of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission for not more than sixty days from the date of the order, pending application to the court for its order or injunction, in which case the said order shall contain a specific finding, based upon evidence submitted to the judge making the order and identified by reference thereto, that such irreparable damage would result to the petitioner and specifying the nature of the damage. The court may, at the time of hearing such application, upon a like finding, continue the temporary stay or suspension in whole or in part until its decision upon the application.

SEC. 4. That from and after the passage of this act all cases and proceedings in the court of commerce which, but for this act, would be brought by or against the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be brought by or against the United States, and the United States may intervene in any case or proceeding in the court of commerce whenever, though it has not been made a party, public interests are involved.

SEC. 5. That the Attorney-General shall have charge and control of the interests of the Government in all cases and proceedings in the court of commerce and in the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal from the court of commerce. The Interstate Commerce Commission and its attorneys shall take no part in the conduct of any such litigation. The Attorney-General, however, if in his opinion the public interest requires it, may retain and employ in the name of the United States such attorneys and counselors at law as he may think necessary to assist in the discharge of any of the duties incumbent upon him and his subordinate attorneys; and the Attorney-General shall stipulate with such special attorneys and counsel the amount of their compensation and shall have supervision of their action.

SEC. 6. That before the date fixed for the opening of the court of commerce as in section 1 hereof provided, all cases and proceedings of which from that time the court of commerce is hereby given exclusive jurisdiction may be brought in the same courts and conducted in like manner and with like effect as is now provided by law; and if any such case or proceedings shall have gone to final judgment or decree before the date so fixed, appeal may be taken from such final judgment or decree in like manner and with like effect as is now provided by law. Any such case or proceeding within the jurisdiction of the court of commerce which may have been begun in any other court as hereby allowed before the said date shall be forthwith transferred to the court of commerce if it has not yet proceeded to final judgment or decree in such other court, unless it has been finally submitted for the decision of such court; and all previous proceedings in such transferred case shall stand and operate notwithstanding the transfer, subject to the same control over them by the court of commerce and to the same right of subsequent action in the case or proceeding as if the transferred case or proceeding had been originally begun in the court of commerce. The clerk of the court from which any case or proceeding is so transferred to the court of commerce shall transmit to and file in the court of commerce the originals of all papers filed in such case or proceeding and a certified transcript of all record entries in the case or proceeding up to the time of transfer.

SEC. 7. That section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph, as follows:

"Agreements between common carriers subject to this act specifying the classifications of freight and the rates, fares, and charges for transportation of passengers and freight which they agree to establish shall not be unlawful under the act to regulate commerce as amended, or under the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' or otherwise, if a copy of such agreement is filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission within twenty days after it is made, and before or when any schedule of any rate, fare, or charge or any classification made pursuant to the agreement is filed with the commission; but all provisions of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and all provisions of this act and any future amendments thereof shall apply to such agreed rates, fares, and charges, and such agreed classifications, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have like control over and power of action concerning any agreed rate, fare, charge, or classification, including suspension of the rate or classification before it becomes effective, and pending investigation of its propriety, as if the rate, fare, charge, or classification had been made without agreement, and any party to such agreement may cancel it as to all or any of the agreed rates, fares, charges, or classifications, by thirty days' notice in writing to the other parties and to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and such agreement of carriers, though filed with the commission, shall not be deemed a tariff or schedule of rates, fares, or charges collectible from the public, or operate itself to alter any such tariff or schedule whensoever filed and published, but nothing in this section contained shall be deemed to authorize the making of agreements for the pooling of freights in violation of the provisions of section 5 of the said act of February 4, 1887."

SEC. 8. That section 6 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"If any railroad corporation, being a common carrier subject to this act, after written request made upon the freight agent of such carrier hereinafter in this section referred to by any person or company for a written statement of the rate or charge applicable to a described shipment between stated places under the schedules or tariffs to which such carrier is a party, shall refuse or omit to give such written statement within a reasonable time, or shall misstate in writing its applicable rate, and if the person or company making such request suffers damage in consequence of such refusal or omission or in consequence of the misstatement of the rate, either through making the shipment over a line or route for which the proper rate is higher than the rate over another available line or route, or through entering into any sale or other contract whereunder such person or company obligates himself or itself to make such shipment of freight at his or its cost, then the said carrier shall be liable to a penalty of $250, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States."

It shall be the duty of every such railroad corporation to keep at all times conspicuously posted in every station where freight is received for transportation the name of an agent resident in the city, village, or town where such station is located, to whom application may be made for the information by this section required to be furnished on written request; and in case any carrier shall fail at any time to have such name so posted in any station, it shall be sufficient to address such request to "The Station Agent of the ——— Company at ——— Station," inserting the name of the carrier company and of the station in the blanks, and to serve the same by depositing the request so addressed, with postage thereon prepaid, in any post-office.

"That whenever, after full hearing upon a complaint made as provided in section 13 of this act, or upon complaint of any common carrier, or after full hearing under an order for investigation and hearing made by the commission on its own initiative (either in extension of any pending complaint or without any complaint whatever), the commission shall be of opinion that any individual or joint rates or charges whatsoever demanded, charged, or collected by any common carrier or carriers subject to the provisions of this act for the transportation of persons or property as defined in the first section of this act, or that any individual or joint classifications, regulations, or practices whatsoever of such carrier or carriers affecting such rates are unjust or unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate or rates, charge or charges, to be thereafter observed in such case as the maximum to be charged, and what individual or joint classification, regulation, or practice in respect to such transportation is just, fair, and reasonable to be thereafter followed, and to make an order that the carrier or carriers shall cease and desist from such violation to the extent to which the commission finds the same to exist, and shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any rate or charge for such transportation in excess of the maximum rate or charge so prescribed, and shall adopt the classification and shall conform to the regulation or practice so prescribed. All orders of the commission, except orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than thirty days, and shall continue in force for such period of time, not exceeding two years, as shall be prescribed in the order of the commission, unless the same shall be suspended or modified or set aside by the commission, or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction. Whenever the carrier or carriers, in obedience to such order of the commission or otherwise, in respect to joint rates, fares, or charges, shall fail to agree among themselves upon the apportionment or division thereof, the commission may, after hearing, make a supplement order prescribing the just and reasonable proportion of such joint rate to be received by each carrier party thereto, which order shall take effect as a part of the original order.

"Whenever there shall be filed with the commission any schedule stating a new individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, or any new individual or joint classification, or any new individual or joint regulation or practice affecting any rate, fare, or charge, the commission shall have, and it is hereby given, authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, and if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the propriety of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice; and pending such hearing and the decision thereon the commission, upon filing with such schedule and delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, but not for a longer period than sixty days beyond the time when such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice would otherwise go into effect; and after full hearing, whether completed before or after the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the commission may make such order in reference to such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice had become effective.

"The commission may also, after hearing, on a complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, establish through routes and joint classifications, and may establish joint rates as the maximum to be charged and may prescribe the division of such rates as hereinbefore provided and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated, whenever the carriers themselves shall have refused or neglected to establish voluntarily such through routes or joint classifications or joint rates; and this provision shall apply when one of the connecting carriers is a water line. The commission shall not, however, establish any through route, classification, or rate between street, suburban, or interurban electric passenger railways not engaged in the general business of transporting freight in addition to their passenger and express business and railroads of a different character.

"And in establishing such through route, the commission shall not require any company, without its consent, to embrace in such route substantially less than the entire length of its railroad and of any intermediate railroad operated in conjunction and under a common management or control therewith, which lies between the termini of such proposed through route, unless to do so would make such through route unreasonably long as compared with another practicable through route which could otherwise be established.

"In all cases where at the time of delivery of property to any railroad corporation being a common carrier, for transportation subject to the provisions of this act to any point of destination, between which and the point of such delivery for shipment two or more through routes and through rates shall have been established as in this act provided, to which through routes and through rates such carrier is a party, the person, firm, or corporation making such shipment, subject to such reasonable exceptions and regulations as the Interstate Commerce Commission shall from time to time prescribe, shall have the right to designate in writing by which of such through routes such property shall be transported to destination, and it shall thereupon be the duty of the initial carrier to route said property and issue a through bill of lading therefor as so directed, and to transport said property over its own line or lines and deliver the same to a connecting line or lines according to such through route, and it shall be the duty of each of said connecting carriers to receive said property and transport it over the said line or lines and deliver the same to the next succeeding carrier or consignee according to said bill of lading.

"If the owner of property transported under this act directly or indirectly renders any service connected with such transportation, or furnishes any instrumentality used therein, the charge and allowance therefor shall be no more than is just and reasonable, and the commission may, after hearing on a complaint or on its own initiative, determine what is a reasonable charge as the maximum to be paid by the carrier or carriers for the services so rendered or for the use of the instumentality so furnished, and fix the same by appropriate order, which order shall have the same force and effect and be enforced in like manner as the orders above provided for under this section.

"The foregoing enumeration of powers shall not exclude any power which the commission would otherwise have in the making of an order under the provisions of this act."

SEC. 10. That section 16 of said act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out all that part of the section which follows the sentence, "It shall be the duty of every common carrier, its agents and employees, to observe and comply with such orders so long as the same shall remain in effect," and by substituting for the part so stricken out the following:

"Any carrier, any officer, representative, or agent of a carrier, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, or agent of either of them, who knowingly fails or neglects to obey any order made under the provisions of section 15 of this act shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $5,000 for each offense. Every distinct violation shall be a separate offense, and in case of a continuing violation each day shall be deemed a separate offense.

"The forfeiture provided for in this act shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States, and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States brought in the district where the carrier has its principal operating office, or in any district through which the road of the carrier runs.

"It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of forfeitures. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

"The commission may employ such attorneys as it finds necessary for proper legal aid and service of the commission or its members in the conduct of their work, or for proper representation of the public interests in investigations made by it, or cases or proceedings pending before it, whether at the commission's own instance or upon complaint; and the expenses of such employment shall be paid out of the appropriation for the commission.

"If any carrier fails or neglects to obey any order of the commission other than for the payment of money while the same is in effect, any party injured thereby, or the United States, by its Attorney-General, may apply to the court of commerce for enforcement of such order. If, after hearing, that court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served, and that the carrier is in disobedience of the same, the court shall enforce obedience to such order by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such carrier, its officers, agents, or representatives, from further disobedience of such order, or to enjoin upon it or them obedience to the same.

"The copies of schedules and classifications and tariffs of rates, fares, and charges, and of all contracts, agreements, and arrangements between common carriers filed with the commission as herein provided, and the statistics, tables, and figures contained in the annual or other reports of carriers made to the commission as required under the provisions of this act shall be preserved as public records in the custody of the secretary of the commission, and shall be received as prima facie evidence of what they purport to be for the purpose of investigations by the commission and in all judicial proceedings; and copies of and extracts from any of said schedules, classifications, tariffs, contracts, agreements, arrangements, or reports made public records as aforesaid, certified by the secretary, under the commission's seal, shall be received in evidence with like effect as the originals."

SEC. 11. That section 20 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, is amended by striking out the following paragraph:

"Said detailed reports shall contain all the required statistics for the period of twelve months ending on the 30th day of June in each year, and shall be made out under oath and filed with the commission, at its office in Washington, on or before the 30th day of September then next following, unless additional time be granted in any case by the commission; and if any carrier, person, or corporation subject to the provisions of this act shall fail to make and file said annual reports within the time above specified, or within the time extended by the commission for making and filing the same, or shall fail to make specific answer to any question authorized by the provisions of this section within thirty days from the time it is lawfully required so to do, such parties shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day it shall continue to be in default with respect thereto. The commission shall also have authority to require said carriers to file monthly reports of earnings and expenses or special reports within a specified period, and if any such carrier shall fail to file such reports within the time fixed by the commission it shall be subject to the forfeitures last above provided."

And by adding in lieu of the paragraph so stricken out the following:

"Said detailed reports shall contain all the required statistics for the period of twelve months ending on the 30th day of June in each year, or on the 31st of December in each year if the commission by order substitute that period for the year ending June 30th, and shall be made out under oath and filed with the commission at its office in Washington within three months after the close of the year for which the report is made, unless additional time be granted in any case by the commission; and if any carrier, person, or corporation, subject to the provisions of this act, shall fail to make and file said annual reports within the time above specified, or within the time extended by the commission for making and filing the same, or shall fail to make specific answer to any question authorized by the provisions of this section within thirty days from the time it is lawfully required so to do, such party shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day it shall continue to be in default with respect thereto. The commission shall also have authority by general or special orders to require said carriers, or any of them, to file monthly reports of earnings and expenses, and to file periodical or special, or both periodical and special, reports concerning any matters about which the commission is authorized or required by this or any other law to inquire or to keep itself informed; and such periodical or special reports shall be under oath whenever the commission so requires; and if any such carrier shall fail to make and file any such periodical or special report within the time fixed by the commission, it shall be subject to the forfeitures last above provided."

SEC. 12. That no railroad corporation which is a common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, shall hereafter acquire, directly or indirectly, any interest of whatsoever kind in the capital stock, or purchase or lease the railroad, of any railroad corporation owning or operating a line of railroad which is directly and substantially competitive with that of such first-named corporation respecting business to which said act to regulate commerce, as amended, applies; and any corporation which acquires any interest in capital stock, or which purchases or leases a railroad contrary to this section, or which holds or retains any interest in capital stock or in a railroad hereafter acquired in violation of this section, shall be fined $5,000 for each day or part of day during which it holds or retains such interest unlawfully acquired: Provided, however, That nothing in this section contained shall operate to prevent any such corporation which at the date of the passage of this act owns not less than one-half of the entire issued and outstanding capital stock of any other railroad corporation from acquiring any of the remainder of such stock, nor to prevent any such corporation which is now operating under lease, made for not less than twenty years, a railroad of any other such corporation from renewing such lease or acquiring the reversionary ownership of the lessor railroad, either directly or through purchases of the stock of the lessor company: And provided further, That the words "railroad corporation," as used in this section, shall not apply to or include street, suburban, or interurban electric passenger railway corporations.

But nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect the rights or liabilities of either party to any suit or action pending at the passage of this act, nor to authorize or validate the acquisition by a railroad corporation, being a common carrier subject to said act to regulate commerce, as amended, of any interest in the capital stock or the purchase or lease of the railroad of any other railroad company in violation of any other act of Congress, including the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

Any attempted acquisition of an interest in capital stock, or the purchase or lease of a railroad, contrary to this section shall be void and may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States; and the holding or retention of any interest in capital stock or the acquisition of a railroad contrary to this section may likewise be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States; but any railroad corporation, being a common carrier as aforesaid, which proposes to acquire any interest in the capital stock or to lease or purchase a railroad of any other corporation may apply to the court of commerce by its petition for that purpose, filed in advance of actual taking of such interest in capital stock or the acquisition of such railroad, but after an agreement or contract for its acquisition has been made, with a stipulation therein that such agreement or contract shall take effect in case it is found by the court of commerce not to violate this section, for an adjudication as between such corporation and the United States, whether or not the proposed acquisition of an interest in the capital stock or the proposed purchase or lease of the railroad of another corporation violates this section, and the adjudication of the court of commerce upon such application shall have the ordinary effect of judgments as an estoppel between the parties.

The court of commerce is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine such applications and to take all proper proceedings thereon; and the filing of said petition shall be taken as a consent on the part of the corporation making the application that the court of commerce issue at once an interlocutory injunction against the proposed acquisition pending final determination by the court concerning its legality hereunder. If the court of commerce finally adjudges the proposed transaction to be unlawful, it shall by its decree permanently enjoin the proposed acquisition. In case the United States shall have sued to restrain the proposed acquisition in a court other than the court of commerce before the corporation proposing to make such acquisition files its petition as aforesaid in the court of commerce, such suit of the United States shall be stayed pending the decision of the court of commerce if it has not yet proceeded to final decree, and said suit of the United States shall be dismissed if the court of commerce finally adjudges that the proposed acquisition does not violate this section. In making the determination herein provided for the court shall take into consideration the effect of such proposed acquisition upon the due observance and effective enforcement of all the laws of the United States, and the relative importance of any benefit to the public interest and of any effect upon competition resulting from such acquisition.

SEC. 13. That, except as hereinafter provided, no railroad corporation which is a common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, shall hereafter issue for any purpose connected with or relating to any part of its business governed by said act to regulate commerce, as amended, any capital stock or certificate of stock without previous or simultaneous payment to it of not less than the par value of such stock or any bond or other evidence of indebtedness, except notes maturing not more than two years from the date of their issue, without previous or simultaneous payment to such corporation of not less than the par value of such bond or other evidence of indebtedness, or if sold at less than par, then of not less than its reasonable market value, which value shall be ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission and stated in a sealed certificate issued by the commission to the corporation, or to any person or persons intending to organize such corporation, and recorded with the commission. If the commission shall ascertain that there is no reasonable market value of such bond or other evidence of indebtedness at the date of such certificate, then the commission shall ascertain and state in such certificate the reasonable selling price of such bond or other evidence of indebtedness at such date, and nothing in this section contained shall prevent the issue of such bond or other evidence of indebtedness if sold at or in excess of the selling price so stated, and no property, services, or other thing than money shall be taken in payment to the corporation of the par of such stock, or certificate of stock, and the par or other required price of such bond, or other evidence of indebtedness, except in every instance at the fair value of such property, services, or other thing than money, which shall be ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission and stated in a sealed certificate issued by it to such corporation, or to any person or persons intending to form such corporation, and recorded with the commission before the issue of said stock, certificate of stock, or other evidence of indebtedness: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent a corporation subject to this act from issuing its bonds or other obligations to refund bonds or other obligations heretofore issued and outstanding to an amount requisite to take up or refund the same, or from issuing or agreeing to issue its capital stock at its par value in payment or exchange for its notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness now outstanding or hereafter issued in conformity with the provisions of this act.

No issue of stock or bonds shall be made for the purpose of paying or taking up notes maturing not more than two years from the date of their issue and hereafter issued by such corporation for a purpose connected with or relating to any of its business governed by said act to regulate commerce as amended, in an amount greater than will suffice, upon issue of such stock or bonds under the rules hereinbefore prescribed concerning issues of stock or bonds, to yield a sum equal to the amount of money actually received by such corporation for such notes; or, if such notes were sold at the time of their issue for less than their face value, to yield a sum equal to the amount of such notes if the Interstate Commerce Commission, before the issue of such new stock or bonds, shall state in a sealed certificate issued by the commission to the corporation and recorded with the commission that the commission finds that said notes were issued by the corporation at the price received therefor in good faith and after proper endeavors to obtain therefor their reasonable market or selling value; or in case the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find that the fact is otherwise, then a sum equal to the amount of notes which the Interstate Commerce Commission before the issue of such new stock or bonds shall state in a like certificate would have availed to procure for such corporation upon the sale of such notes at their reasonable market or selling value a sum equal to the consideration actually received for the notes by such corporation.

No railroad corporation subject to the act to regulate commerce as amended shall hereafter, for any purpose connected with or relating to any part of its business governed by said act, issue any capital stock convertible into other capital stock of such railroad corporation, unless by the terms of the certificate representing the stock so convertible the amount, par value, of capital stock that the holder of such certificate is entitled to receive in exchange therefor shall be equal to or less than the par value of the shares of stock represented by such certificate of convertible stock; but nothing contained in this act shall be deemed to prohibit the issue by any such corporation of its capital stock in exchange for and in accordance with the terms of such convertible stock issued in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph.

Nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit the mortgage or pledge by any railroad corporation, subject to the act to regulate commerce as amended, of any bond or other evidence of indebtedness, issued by such railroad corporation, as security for or as part security for any note, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness issued by, or loan made to such railroad corporation which shall not be issued or made in violation of the provisions of this act: Provided, That the terms of said loan and of such notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness, if any, shall provide that none of said pledged bonds or other evidence of indebtedness, shall, upon nonpayment of the notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness which they are pledged to secure, or upon nonperformance of any of the conditions thereof, be sold or become the property of the holders of the notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness so secured, either directly or through a trustee for their benefit except at or through public sale, notice whereof shall be published at least once a week for not less than three successive weeks prior thereto in at least one daily newspaper of general circulation published in the place where such sale shall take place: And provided further, That if such notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness, if any, shall provide that the owners thereof shall have the right to convert the same into the bonds or other evidences of indebtedness so mortgaged or pledged, the Interstate Commerce Commission, previously to the making of such loan, shall have ascertained and stated, in a sealed certificate issued by the commission to such corporation or to any person or persons intending to organize such corporation and recorded with the commission or otherwise, as authorized by this act, the reasonable market or selling value of such bonds or other evidences of indebtedness so mortgaged or pledged and the rate which said reasonable market or selling value bears to the reasonable market or selling value of such secured notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness, and that such secured notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness shall not provide that the owners thereof shall have the right upon such conversion to receive in exchange therefor bonds or other evidences of indebtedness so mortgaged or pledged to an amount greater than would be receivable at the rate so found and stated in such certificate of the commission.

Nothing in this act contained shall be taken to prohibit the issue of any bond or other evidence of indebtedness pursuant to the terms of any instrument heretofore executed, provided the same shall not be sold except in conformity with the foregoing provisions of this section with respect to the market or selling value and the ascertainment thereof by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Nothing in this act contained shall in any way affect or impair the validity of any mortgage or pledge of any capital stock, certificate of stock, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness now mortgaged or pledged as security for, or as part security for, any loan heretofore made to any such corporation, or prohibit the sale upon foreclosure or otherwise of any such mortgaged or pledged stock, certificate of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness, upon the terms and conditions provided in the instrument, if any, whereunder such securities may have been pledged, or in the contract of loan; and nothing in this section contained shall be construed in any way to prohibit or affect the issue of any capital stock or the delivery of any certificate of stock or the issue of any bond or other evidence of indebtedness in exchange for or to provide for the retirement of any capital stock, certificate of stock, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness now outstanding, or provided to be issued, or the pledge of the exchanged or retired stock or securities, on such terms and conditions as may be provided in the instruments whereunder any of the stocks, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness referred to in this paragraph are respectively issued or authorized to be issued.

SEC. 14. That in case at any time it shall be proposed, by or pursuant to any plan of reorganization of any railroad corporation or corporations incorporated prior to January 1, 1910, the properties whereof shall be in the hands of a receiver or of receivers or shall be subject to be sold in any suit or suits or other judicial proceedings for foreclosure of any mortgage or deed of trust heretofore executed, or for the dissolution or winding up of such corporation, or to procure the satisfaction of its debts or the application of its property thereto, pending at the time of such proposal; that any corporation utilized or to be utilized for the purposes of such reorganization, which at such time shall be, or, when organized and operating, will be, subject to the act to regulate commerce as amended (every corporation so utilized or to be utilized being hereinafter referred to by the term "new corporation"), shall issue stock and bonds and other evidences of indebtedness, or any thereof, for any purpose connected with or relating to any part of its business governed by said act to regulate commerce as amended, application for any certificate of the Interstate Commerce Commission that may be requisite under the provisions of this section may be made by any person, committee, or representatives of any committee, or by managers having in charge the formulating or carrying out of any such plan of reorganization, and such certificate may be issued to such person, committee, representatives, or managers for the use of the new corporation; and the issue pursuant to such plan of reorganization by any new corporation, of stock, whether of a single class or of two or more classes as may be authorized by law, to an amount in the aggregate not exceeding, in par value, the aggregate amount, par value, of the stocks of the corporation or corporations so reorganized or to be reorganized pursuant to said plan (being, in the case of each corporation, the stock outstanding at the date of said certificate of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of the previous dissolution of such corporation) shall not be deemed to be prohibited by anything contained in this act; and the issue by any new corporation of bonds and other evidences of indebtedness, whether unsecured or secured by mortgage upon said properties or otherwise, to an aggregate amount not exceeding the amount of new money paid to the new corporation pursuant to such plan of reorganization and the amounts of bonds and other obligations and debts, including receiver's liabilities, which at the time of such sale or sales may have constituted claims or charges, whether legal or equitable, upon or against the corporation or corporations so reorganized or the properties thereof, and provision for the payment of which or the delivery of securities of the new corporation in exchange for which shall be made in such plan, shall not be deemed to be prohibited by anything contained in this act, provided that the aggregate amount of interest charges agreed to be paid by the new corporation or to which its property will be subject shall not exceed the aggregate amount of the interest charges to which the corporation or corporations so reorganized or their properties shall have been subject plus interest upon bonds issued as aforesaid for new money; and nothing in this act shall be deemed to prohibit the new corporation from assuming any bonds, debts, or other obligations of the corporation or corporations so reorganized, in place of which it might, in accordance with the rules prescribed by this section, issue its own stocks, bonds, or other obligations, or to prevent the issue, in addition to the stock hereinabove specified, of an amount of stock of the new corporation in lieu of, but not exceeding the face amount of, bonds and other obligations which, under the provisions hereof, the new corporation might issue, and no issue of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness by any new corporation, which it may make consistently with the rules prescribed by sections 12 and 13 of this act, shall be deemed to be prohibited by anything in this section contained; but no issue of stock or bonds shall be made by any such corporation unless the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have ascertained and stated in a sealed certificate issued by it as above provided and recorded with the commission that the stock and bonds and other evidences of indebtedness proposed to be issued, and the interest charges on such bonds and other evidences of indebtedness will not exceed the amounts of stock, bonds, and other obligations and of the interest charges respectively permitted by the terms of this section or such greater amount, if any, as may be issued in accordance with the rules prescribed in sections 12 and 13 of this act.

In case two or more railroad corporations, subject to the act to regulate commerce as amended, shall be consolidated or merged pursuant to the laws of a State or States applicable thereto, and such consolidation or merger shall consist in uniting the organizations, properties, businesses, and stocks of said corporations without increase in the aggregate amount of the stocks of the corporations so consolidated or merged and without increase in the aggregate amount of, or the aggregate interest payable upon, the bonds or other obligations of said corporations so consolidated or merged; or, if the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have ascertained and stated in a sealed certificate issued by it to the corporations in respect to which such consolidation or merger is to take place or shall have taken place or to one of them (or to any person, committee, or representatives of any committee or to managers having in charge the formulating or carrying out of any plan of reorganization such as is hereinbefore mentioned under which the corporation that is to issue new securities to be distributed under such plan will be a corporation resulting from any consolidation or consolidations, merger or mergers), that the stock to be issued by such consolidated corporation and the bonds and other obligations, if any, to be assumed and issued thereby does not exceed the fair estimated value of the properties of such consolidated corporation, nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to prohibit the issue of such stock and bonds and other obligations, or any of them, or the assumption of all or any of the bonds or other obligations of the corporations so consolidated or merged.

Nothing in this act contained shall prevent a railroad corporation, subject to the said act to regulate commerce, as amended, from acquiring the stock and bonds of another railroad corporation, subject to said act, and not competing with such first-mentioned corporation, by the issue of its own stock and bonds, provided the aggregate amount of the par values of the stock and bonds so issued (a) shall not exceed the fair value of the property of the corporation whose stock and bonds are so acquired, which value shall be ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission, or (b) shall not exceed the aggregate par values of the stock and bonds so acquired, but without increase in the aggregate interest payable on the bonds or other obligations so acquired; which facts shall be in like manner ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize or to validate or permit the consolidation or merger in any manner of two or more corporations in violation of any other act of Congress, including the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopolies."

SEC. 15. That upon application for a certificate of the Interstate Commerce Commission, pursuant to section 13 or section 14 of this act, of which notice shall be served on the United States in like manner as is provided with respect to notices of hearings upon petition by section 1 hereof, the commission shall hear and determine the matters as to which its certificate is desired, and may make proper rules and regulations concerning the manner of such application and the conduct of the hearing.

No certificate issued pursuant to the provisions of section 13 or section 14 of this act shall be held to authorize any action in the issue of stock, bonds, or otherwise, after the expiration of twelve months from the date of such certificate with respect whereof such certificate is required by the provisions of this act, but the Interstate Commerce Commission may, on application duly made to it, extend the period within which such certificate shall evidence compliance with this act for such additional period or periods not exceeding twelve months each as it may deem not contrary to the public interests.

Issues of stock, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness contrary to section 13 or section 14 hereof may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States or of any director or officer of the corporation proposing to make the issue, or of the subscriber or subscribers for or the holder or holders of shares of stock thereof amounting to not less than 10 per cent of the aggregate amount of the stock of such corporation outstanding and subscribed for; and any director, officer, or stockholder of such corporation who willfully assents to or concurs in any issue of securities forbidden by section 13 or section 14 of this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment not longer than three years, or both.

Nothing in this section or in said section 13 or said section 14 contained shall in any way affect or impair the validity of any such stock, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness in the hands of innocent holders for value.

SEC. 16. That nothing in this act contained shall undo or impair any proceedings heretofore taken by or before the Interstate Commerce Commission or any of the acts of said commission; and in any cases, proceedings, or matters now pending before it, the commission may exercise any of the powers hereby conferred upon it, as would be proper in cases, proceedings, or matters hereafter initiated; and nothing in this act contained shall operate to release or affect any obligation, liability, penalty, or forfeiture heretofore existing against or incurred by any person, corporation, or association.

SEC. 17. That any inquiry necessary or proper to be made by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the provisions of section 13 or section 14 of this act may be prosecuted by one or more of the commissioners; and any order or certificate of the commission authorized or required by any provision of either of said sections may, in the first instance, be made by one of the commissioners, and shall be regarded as the order of the commission unless, within twenty days after the making of such order or the granting of such certificate, either party affected thereby shall by writing filed with the secretary of the commission require the submission of the matter to the commission, whereupon the matter shall be considered by the commission, and action shall be taken with respect to the subject-matter of the petition by at least a majority of the whole commission, but the testimony, reports, and other records of inquiry made by a single commissioner may be accepted by the full commission as the basis for its action, or the commission may, in its discretion, require other or further evidence to be submitted to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill that has just been read, to be considered in connection with the bill. I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator does not offer the amendment now?

Mr. HEYBURN. I offer it in the way of a notice, to be considered, I said, in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just read, calendar No. 202, be made the unfinished business.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not yet 2 o'clock. The Senator can not do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When 2 o'clock arrives, if the bill shall then be under consideration, it will become the unfinished business.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to know what status the bill just read occupies. What is it designed to do?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was taken up on the calendar in the regular way, the Chair will state.

Mr. MONEY. Taken up from the calendar? Has there been any order of business suggested in relation to it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia was just about to make a suggestion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How does it become the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After 2 o'clock it will become the unfinished business, if it is under consideration at that time.

Mr. MONEY. May I inquire of the Senator from West Virginia what action he proposes shall be taken on the bill?

Mr. ELKINS. I am going to ask that it be the unfinished business, to the exclusion of all other business except appropriation bills. I ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived and the bill being under consideration, it becomes unfinished business by unanimous consent.

Mr. ELKINS. It is now the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask, Is it the unfinished business in the sense that it would be if it had been taken up after 2 o'clock; that is to say, it will not be the unfinished business to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it will. That is the rule of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Under the rule——

Mr. HEYBURN. It has not been taken up. It is not the unfinished business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It will become so at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not unless it is under consideration. The bill is not under consideration. It is being read for information at the request of a Senator.

Mr. ELKINS. It was read under the eighth rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 2 o'clock p. m.). It was read under Rule VIII, and taken up in regular order under Rule VIII. The bill was being read, and the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, of course it could not displace a vote of the Senate, but there has been no vote of the Senate making any unfinished business.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia if he proposes to do anything with the bill to-day?

Mr. ELKINS. No, sir; not to-day.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, under the ruling of the Chair, as this matter was under consideration, which I did not understand, I offer the amendment that I sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Idaho to offer the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following additional sections:

SEC. —. That there is hereby established additional courts of the United States, to be known as "District land courts of the United States," in each of the States and Territories in which are situated lands belonging to the United States, which are or may become subject to entry and sale under the laws of the United States, wherever such lands in any State or Territory exceed 2,500,000 acres, and where such lands in any State or Territory do not exceed such number of acres, jurisdiction over such lands may be exercised by a district land court nearest to such lands.

SEC. —. That the said district land court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine as herein provided all contests involving the right to occupancy, entry, and patent of the lands of the United States within its jurisdiction in the manner hereinafter provided. Such court shall hold at least one term in each local land district within the jurisdiction of said court during each year for the purpose of hearing and determining causes arising in such local land district. Any decision or order may be made and filed or judgment rendered at any place within the jurisdiction of said court without regard to term time.

SEC. —. That there shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, in each judicial district in which, under the provisions of this act, a land court of the United States is provided to be established, one judge, who shall have the same qualifications as that of the district court judges of the United States and holding by like tenure of office, and who shall have and exercise all the powers herein conferred upon such district land courts. Said judge shall be entitled to compensation of $5,000 per annum, payable in equal quarterly installments. That the said courts shall prescribe the style and form of its seal and the form of the writs and other process of procedure, as may be conformable to the exercise of its jurisdiction as conferred by law. The judge of the said court shall appoint a clerk who shall perform and exercise such duties and powers within its jurisdiction as are provided by law and by the rules of the court. The salary of the clerk of said court shall be $2,500 per annum, which shall be paid in equal proportions quarterly; the costs and fees of the said court, as the same shall be established by law, shall be expended and accounted for and paid over to the Treasury Department of the United States in the same manner as is provided in respect to the costs and fees of the circuit courts of the United States.

SEC. —. That the jurisdiction of the said district land courts of the United States shall extend to all controversies affecting the right to occupy, use, locate, or enjoy any lands belonging to the United States by any citizen thereof, whether reserved or unreserved; also to all causes on removal, transfer, or appeal from any decision of the register or receiver of any United States land office within the district for which said land court is established, or over which its jurisdiction may be extended. Whenever any adverse claim or protest is filed under oath in the office of the register or receiver of any land office of the United States involving the right to enter or receive a patent for any public land of the United States, or whenever the right to enter or receive a patent for such land is denied or contested by or on behalf of the United States, the register of such United States land office shall, within thirty days after the filing of such adverse claim or protest, or after the denial by him of the right of the applicant to enter or receive a patent for the land applied for, upon notice in writing being filed with the register of such land office by either the applicant or the adverse claimant or protesting party, or on their behalf, that such parties desire to try the issues involved in such contest in the land courts of the United States, upon the payment of the proper fees therefor, make and file with the clerk of the proper district land court of the United States a certified copy of all papers and official entries pertaining to such application and contest, and therefore no further action or proceeding shall be had in the land office until final adjudication of the rights of the parties to said contest shall be had by said land courts. Upon receipt of said transcript by the clerk of the land court the said clerk shall make an entry of said proceeding in due form in a docket to be kept for that purpose, and said entry in said docket shall specify each and every paper by name and character constituting said record and transcript, and said clerk shall safely keep on file the papers and documents constituting such record and transcript. That upon the receipt, docketing, and filing of said papers, as aforesaid, by the clerk of the land court, the jurisdiction of the said land court shall attach for all purposes wherein the court may exercise its jurisdiction under the provisions of this act. Said courts shall have original jurisdiction upon the filing of a bill of complaint in said court by any person or persons or corporation, or by any proper person authorized to represent the Government of the United States in so doing, to cause an original or alias summons or subpœna to issue to the party named as defendant in said complaint, requiring such defendant or defendants to appear and answer or defend in such action, and upon issue being joined in law or fact, or both, the court shall have power to proceed to try and determine all such issues, as hereinbefore provided, in the case of causes certified from the United States Land Office and in accordance with the general methods of procedure in the courts of the United States. That the said land court of the United States herein established shall have jurisdiction to fully try and determine such causes according to the law and the facts by it to be ascertained and determined, and may issue any and all process and writs necessary to the exercise of its jurisdiction for the purpose of determining and administering complete justice to the parties litigant. Said land court may, in its discretion, call and impanel a jury for the trial of any question of fact, such jury to consist of six citizens of the United States resident within the land district in which the premises in dispute are situated, to be impaneled as other jurors are impaneled in the United States court; but this section shall not apply to cases involving the right to patent mining claims arising under the provision of section 2326 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. —. That section 2326 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2326. When an adverse claim is filed during the period of publication it shall be upon oath of the person or persons making the same, or by the oath of any duly authorized agent or attorney in fact, of the adverse claimant cognizant of the facts stated, and the adverse claimant if residing, or at the time being, beyond the limits of the district wherein the claim is situated may make oath to the adverse claim before the clerk of any court of record where the adverse claimant may then be, or before any notary public of any State or Territory, and shall show the nature, boundaries, and extent of such adverse claim, and all proceedings, except the publication of notice and making and filing of the affidavit thereof, shall be stayed until the controversy shall have been settled or decided by a court of competent jurisdiction, or the adverse claim waived. Notice of the filing of such adverse claim or protest and of such removal to the United States land court shall be given in writing by the register of such land office to the applicants and to the United States attorney for the district, in writing, within ten days after such action is taken, as hereinafter provided, in cases certified to said land court. It shall be the duty of the adverse claimant, within thirty days after filing the adverse claim, to cause the record of said application and of said adverse claim to be certified by said land officers to the land court of the United States having jurisdiction of the controversy under the provisions of this act, and upon the filing of said certified record in said land court the jurisdiction of such court shall fully attach for the purpose of determining the question of the right of possession and title to the land and premises in controversy, and the final judgment or decree of said land court therein shall be binding upon the parties and the Government and all parties claiming under any of them as to the question of the right of possession and the title to said land and premises. After such judgment or decree shall have become final the party entitled to the possession and title of the claim, or any portion thereof, may without giving further notice file a certified copy of the judgment or decree with the register of the land office in which the controversy originated, and shall pay to the receiver of said land office $5 per acre for the land, together with proper fees, whereupon the whole proceeding and the judgment of the land court shall be certified by the register to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and a patent shall issue thereon for the claim or such portion thereof as the applicant shall appear from the judgment of said land court to be entitled to. If it appears from the judgment of said court that several parties are entitled to separate and different portions of the claim, to be described by metes and bounds in said judgment, each party may pay for his portion of the claim, with the proper fees, and patents shall issue to the several parties according to their respective rights as the same appears by said judgment. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the alienation of the title conveyed by a patent for a mining claim to any person whatever. The land courts may permit substitution of parties shown to have acquired the title or interest of the original parties at any time before final judgment in the court wherein the controversy is pending, and may permit intervention by any party shown by proper pleading to be entitled to intervene for the purpose of determining the right of possession and title to the premises in controversy. If in any action under this section title to the ground in controversy shall not be established in either party thereto, the jury shall so find, and judgment shall be entered according to the verdict. In such case costs shall not be allowed to either party, and the claimant shall not proceed in the land office or be entitled to a patent for the ground in controversy. That the parties to the action pending in the land courts of the United States under the provisions of this act shall have the right to a trial of the facts by a jury to be summoned and impaneled as jurors are summoned and impaneled in actions at law in the courts of the United States, but such right to trial by jury may be waived in writing, to be filed with the clerk of the court, by the parties at any time before trial, in which event the court shall make and file findings of fact and conclusions of law at the time of rendering judgment in such case."

SEC. —. That whenever a contest under the provisions of this act is certified by the register to the district land courts, notice thereof shall be given within ten days in writing delivered as other notices or process as required in this act to be given to the parties in interest or their attorneys of record in the said land office. Wherever the Government of the United States is a party to such proceedings of record notice of all proceedings shall be served upon the United States attorney for the judicial district in which the said land court is situated. The service of any papers or process incident to the exercise of jurisdiction by the land courts may be made by the United States marshal for the district in which the land court is situated or may be made by a male citizen of the United States over the age of 21 years. Mr. BURKETT. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that the bill be laid aside.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that it be laid aside for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside temporarily for the day.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to ask what the proposition is. I could not hear it here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the day.

Mr. HUGHES. Does that include the making of the bill the unfinished business by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has already been made the unfinished business.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not so heard. I heard the ruling of the Chair, but I heard no unanimous consent that that should be the case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, Mr. President; there has been considerable——

Mr. HUGHES. Then I object.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator object to the bill being laid aside for the day?

Mr. HUGHES. If that includes that it is the unfinished business by unanimous consent, I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does not. I think all Senators will agree that this is the status of the bill at the present time. In the first place the Chair ruled that it had become the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Indiana will suspend for a moment, the Chair will state to the Senator from Colorado that it is the unfinished business of the Senate until it is displaced by some vote or motion of the Senate, as it became such at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HUGHES. I heard that ruling of the Chair, but I have not heard that in any way its status has been fixed by unanimous consent, for none was asked and none was given. As it stands now, and as it stood with reference to consent, I understand that consent is now asked, which would give it a different status from what it possessed by virtue of the ruling of the Chair as to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I will state to the Senator I am quite sure that would not give it a different status. I was going to remark that there has been some conversation about the status of this bill. I think we might as well clear it up now, so that everybody will understand it.

Ordinarily a bill is made the unfinished business in one of two ways: By unanimous consent; this bill was not made the unfinished business in that way. By motion at 2 o'clock; it was not made the unfinished business in that way. Or the Chair has held that by being under consideration at 2 o'clock, under Rule VIII, as it was, that it then continues the unfinished business in that way. Being the unfinished business in any of these ways, it would remain the unfinished business only for the day or for the hour or until any moment when it is displaced by the will of the Senate upon motion or unanimous consent. It retains its status in that way. Unanimous consent to lay it aside for the day does not have the effect—and if I am wrong we might as well have this cleared up now—of making it the unfinished business by unanimous consent hereafter. It is simply on the same status as if it had been made the unfinished business by motion, being considered in the way it was, when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, no measure becomes unfinished business——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me just a moment. There is only one form of unanimous consent that could make this or any bill the unfinished business here continuously, to the exclusion of all other business, and that is this form, "to be the unfinished business to be considered from day to day until disposed of." That is the only form of unanimous consent that could do that. Unanimous consent of that kind, once being given, it does become the unfinished business to the exclusion of everything else until it is disposed of. But the bill now could be laid aside instantly by a motion of the Senate. It does not stand at all on the status of unanimous consent, and unanimous consent to lay it aside for the day does not have the effect of making it the unfinished business by unanimous consent. If I am wrong about that, older Senators may correct me——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Although the Senator from Idaho is not an older Senator in service.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate nothing becomes unfinished business by unanimous consent or by a vote. It becomes unfinished business, if at all, by virtue of the position that it occupies under the rules of the Senate. There is no such motion known to the Senate as that a measure shall be made the unfinished business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course, the motion which makes any bill the unfinished business is to proceed to its consideration. That is the motion. The Senator, of course, knows that.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is not all. The motion must be made at a certain time in order to have the effect of making a bill the unfinished business. After 2 o'clock, if a motion is made to proceed to the consideration of a measure and the consideration of it is not completed before adjournment, it becomes and is the unfinished business. The only way that you can take up any other business after 2 o'clock under such circumstances is to ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or to move to proceed to the consideration of something else.

Mr. HEYBURN. To proceed to the consideration of some other measure. This measure was under consideration, as the Chair announced, at 2 o'clock. That obviates the necessity of moving to proceed to its consideration at 2 o'clock. I trust that the record will show that when this order under Rule VIII was reached there was no objection to its consideration.

Some Senator suggested that the bill be read for information. I presume, however, that the RECORD will show that the measure was regularly reached and that it was under consideration at 2 o'clock. A motion to lay it aside should not be confined to the day, but it should be that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. That would carry it until some other measure dominating it displaced it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The fact that there was no objection made at 2 o'clock did not have the effect of either preventing the bill from becoming or making it the unfinished business by unanimous consent or otherwise. As I understand, there are only two forms of unanimous consent in a matter like this. The first is that unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of any measure makes it the unfinished business, but such unanimous consent as that the very next day may be displaced by a motion. The other form of unanimous consent is the one I mentioned a moment ago, which is to proceed to the consideration of a measure and to continue its consideration from day to day until disposed of. That has the effect of keeping it before the Senate not only for that day, but for the entire session or the entire Congress, and no motion or anything else can then dispense with it. But neither one of these forms of unanimous consent has been asked or given.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before that request is acted upon, I want to make a suggestion to the Senator in charge of the bill. As is well known to the Senate, a member of the family of one of the Senators who expects to actively participate in the discussion of the bill is at present ill; and while the Senate, I think, will generally rejoice in the fact that speedy recovery seems to be entirely probable, it would interfere with the taking up of this measure probably before Monday or Tuesday. Therefore, I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that he modify his request so that the bill shall be laid aside until the close of morning business either on Monday or Tuesday next.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to comply with the request of the Senator from Minnesota, but the bill would then lose its place.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not understand that it would lose its place.

Mr. GALLINGER. It can be laid aside from day to day.

Mr. ELKINS. But to-morrow I should have to ask that it be laid aside temporarily. If that was decided to be out of order——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the Senator merely state that he will ask to lay it aside, or see that it is laid aside each day, until Monday or Tuesday. That would surely be acceptable to Senators who want to prepare. The Senator is right. There must be a request each day to lay the bill aside; otherwise the form would be such a unanimous-consent suggestion as we have been talking about. But the Senator from West Virginia can do this and meet the Senator's request. The Senator can state of record that he or some member of his committee will ask each day to lay the bill aside temporarily until Monday or Tuesday—whatever he wants to agree to.

Mr. ELKINS. In view of the statement of facts by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] I, within the rule and not to allow the bill to be displaced, will agree to ask each day—I want to keep this bill the unfinished business—at 2 o'clock that it may be temporarily laid aside until Monday, as I understand. I do not want to put any limitation on the Chair's ruling to the effect that this bill is the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before this matter is settled, I want to make a single suggestion, and it may possibly conflict with the ruling of the Chair.

I was absent when this matter was discussed. I now understand that it has been ruled that a bill under consideration under Rule VIII, which has the limitation of five minutes' debate, and that no Senator shall speak more than once upon it when the hour of 2 o'clock has been reached, becomes the unfinished business under Rule IX. I think there is a very grave question on that point. I think when the hour of 2 o'clock had been reached that a motion ought to have been made to proceed to the consideration of that bill. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought the same way as the Senator, and I want the chairman of the committee to cure that by moving to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MONEY. He has done that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; he has not.

Mr. HEYBURN. Ah, Mr. President, we find ourselves embarrassed by the record. The bill has been stated to be before the Senate, and an amendment has been offered to it. We do not want to mix our record in that way.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is immaterial.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the unfinished business until laid aside.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So that we may all understand the status of the thing, I will ask, Do I understand the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to state that he will on each day at 2 o'clock ask that this bill be laid aside; or, if unanimous consent to lay it aside is not given, that he will then move to lay it aside or have it laid aside by some parliamentary process?

Mr. HEYBURN. Temporarily.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Day by day until Monday or Tuesday next, or whatever time may be agreed on.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not want to place any limitation for fear of imperiling the position or status of the bill now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does not imperil it.

Mr. ELKINS. I have no objection; but I do not want anything to go in the RECORD that by agreement might displace this bill as the unfinished business. I should like the ruling of the Chair as to whether it can be displaced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ELKINS. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay the bill aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAPP. Before that is done I suggest that the Senator in charge of the bill state at this time that on each day at 2 o'clock he will ask to have the bill temporarily laid aside until next Tuesday.

Mr. ELKINS. I am willing to make such a request each day, but I do not know whether saying "until next Tuesday" or any other day would not imperil the order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I would state to the Senator—and I am sure the Chair will confirm this—that all that is necessary as a practical matter for the Senator to do is to state that on each day he will ask that the bill in his charge be temporarily laid aside for that day.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not "for that day."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And that this request shall continue until next Monday.

Mr. GALLINGER. That the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; temporarily laid aside each day for that day, will continue to so ask each day "until next Tuesday." That is all that the Senator has got to do; or, if unanimous consent is not given, he may make a motion to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I understand that the situation now on this bill is this: That it has the place of the unfinished business, to be laid aside at 2 o'clock each day until Monday or Tuesday next.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; laid aside only for the day.

Mr. MONEY. Only for the day?

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to know——

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not know when the Democratic minority will be able to make their report. They have not completed it yet, and they consider it very desirable that their report shall be submitted before this bill is taken up for consideration. They have no objection to its being considered the unfinished business now, and so on, and it may be they will get in their report to-morrow; but I should like to have some declaration from the Senator in charge that this bill will go over for several days yet, because on Saturday the day is to be devoted to another sort of exercises, and there will be no legislative business, I presume, on that day. There are only two days of this week on which this bill can be considered.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the Indian appropriation bill has been reported and is awaiting action.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; and we have exercises incident to the acceptance of the Calhoun statue set aside for next Saturday.

Mr. ELKINS. I think if the bill remains just where it is at present there will be no difficulty about it.

Mr. MONEY. I think not. I only wanted some expression from the Senator in charge of the bill. I do not care how many other Senators talk about it, but I wanted to hear him say something about it.

Mr. ELKINS. I will move to lay aside the bill temporarily from day to day. I can not fix a day. I would fix it in a moment but for fear that I would impair the status of the bill. I think with that statement the bill should go over.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is understood, then, Mr. President, that nothing is to be done; it is the general understanding that nothing is to be done——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is recognized.

Mr. BORAH. I simply rose to get the suggestion which the Senator from Mississippi obtained from the Senator from West Virginia.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF OSAGE AGREEMENT.

The bill (S. 5786) to amend fifth paragraph of section 4 of act approved June 28, 1906 (34 Stat., 539), was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he has conferred with my colleague [Mr. OWEN] with reference to this matter? I understand my colleague expressed a desire to consider the measure before it was passed.

Mr. CLAPP. I think, Mr. President, that is correct; and I suggest that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. CLAPP subsequently said. Senate bill 5786 is a measure into which the Senators from Oklahoma desire to look. Fearing I may forget their request, I ask that the bill be placed under Rule IX, so as to avoid any possibility of its being considered in their absence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COURT OF PATENT APPEALS.

The bill (S. 4982) to establish a United States court of patent appeals, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not particularly object to this bill. It is a bill that I think perhaps will cause considerable discussion, and it ought not to be considered under Rule VIII.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senator will allow the bill to be read.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Very well. After that, however, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a United States court of patent appeals, which shall consist of five judges, of whom four shall constitute a quorum, and shall be a court of record with jurisdiction as is hereinafter limited and established. Such court shall prescribe the form and style of its seal and the forms of its writs and other process and procedure as may be conformable to the exercise of its jurisdiction as shall be conferred by law. [It shall have the appointment of] The President shall have power, by and with the consent of the Senate, to appoint the marshal of the court, who shall have the same powers and perform the same duties under the regulations of the court as are now provided for the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as the same may be applicable. The court shall also appoint a clerk, who shall have the same powers and perform the same duties now possessed and performed by the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as the same may be applicable. The salary of the marshal of the court shall be $2,500 a year, and the salary of the clerk shall be $5,000 a year, both to be paid monthly in 12 equal payments. The costs and fees now provided by law in the Supreme Court of the United States shall be the costs and fees in the United States court of patent appeals; and the same shall be collected, expended, accounted for, and paid over to the Treasury Department of the United States in the same manner as is provided by law in respect to the costs and fees in the Supreme Court of the United States. The court shall have power to establish all needful rules and regulations for the conduct of its business within its jurisdiction as conferred by law.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a chief justice of said United States court of patent appeals, and as vacancies occur shall in like manner appoint others to fill such vacancies from time to time. The acceptance of that office by a judge of the circuit court or district court of the United States shall vacate his office as circuit or district judge.

SEC. 3. That upon the taking effect of this act the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States shall designate from among the judges of circuit and district courts of the United States four judges to sit as associate judges of the United States court of patent appeals, two of them to sit for three years from the first day of the first term thereof, and two of them to sit for six years from the first day thereof, as associate judges of the same court [for six years from the first day of the first term thereof]. And after that, as the periods expire for which such designations shall have been made, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States shall fill the vacancies thus occurring by designation of the same or other judges from among the judges of the circuit courts and the district courts of the United States, to sit for periods of six years each. In case of the death, resignation, or disability of any associate judge of the said court, or of his resignation of his seat in said court, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall designate another judge of a circuit court or a district court of the United States to sit for the unexpired period for which his predecessor had been designated. The designation of a judge of the circuit or district court of the United States to sit as associate judge of the United States court of patent appeals must be with his consent, and his service in that court shall not vacate his office as judge of the circuit court or district court, as the case may be.

SEC. 4. That a term of the United States court of patent appeals shall be held annually at the city of Washington, beginning on the second Monday of October in each year, and the same may be adjourned from time to time as the court shall order. If at any time for the meeting of the court a quorum of the judges shall not be present, the judges present may adjourn the court, and, if necessary, adjourn again from time to time until a quorum appear. If at any sitting of the court the chief justice shall be absent, the associate judge senior in commission as judge of the circuit court of the United States, or senior in age in case of commissions of even date, shall preside. If no judge of a circuit court shall be present, the associate judge senior in commission as a judge of a district court of the United States, or senior in age in case of commissions of even date, shall preside. Until it shall be otherwise provided by Congress the sessions of the court shall be held in a building or rooms to be provided by the marshal of the District of Columbia under the direction and approval of the Attorney-General of the United States. The court shall by order authorize its marshal to employ such deputies and assistants for himself and the clerk of the court and such criers, bailiffs, and messengers as the business of the court shall require, and to pay the salaries of such employees at rates of compensation not exceeding those paid for similar services in the Supreme Court of the United States, and to pay all other necessary incidental expenses of the court. The chief justice and each of the associate judges shall be entitled to employ a clerk, whose salary, at a rate not exceeding that allowed the clerks of the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, shall be paid as part of the expenses of the court. The court shall have power, in its discretion, to appoint a reporter and to fix by order his salary or other compensation for a sum not to exceed $3,000 annually and direct the form and manner of the official publication of its decisions.

SEC. 5. That the chief justice of the United States court of patent appeals shall receive a salary of [twelve] ten thousand dollars per year. The circuit judges of the United States sitting as associate judges of the same court shall each receive the salary allowed him by law as a circuit judge, and in addition thereto, during the time of his service as associate judge of the United States court of patent appeals, but not longer, such additional sum as will make his entire compensation during that service [eleven] nine thousand five hundred dollars per annum. The district judges sitting as associate judges of the United States court of patent appeals shall each receive the salary allowed to him by law as district judge, and in addition thereto, during the term of his service as associate judge of the United States court of patent appeals, but no longer, such additional sum as will make his entire compensation during that service eleven thousand [five hundred] dollars per annum. All the said salaries shall be payable in twelve equal monthly installments. The time during which any judge shall serve in said court shall be deemed continuous service with that in any other court of the United States, before or after such service within the meaning and intent of section 714 of the Revised Statutes. The additional compensation received by a circuit or district judge while sitting as associate judge of the United States court of patent appeals shall not be taken into account in determining the amount to be received by him after retirement.

SEC. 6. That the United States court of patent appeals shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals and writs of error from final judgments and decrees in the circuit courts of the United States in cases arising under the laws of the United States relating to patents for inventions, and from final judgments and decrees in cases arising under the laws of the United States relating to patents for inventions rendered by any other court having jurisdiction under the laws of the United States to hear and decide such cases in the first instance: Provided, however, That it shall have no jurisdiction in cases originating in the Court of Claims. All such appeals shall be taken within six months after the entry of the order, judgment, or decree sought to be reviewed. The practice, procedure, and forms to be observed in the taking, hearing, and determination of such appeals and writs of error shall conform to the practice, procedure, and forms observed in like cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, subject to such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the court.

SEC. 7. That whenever, by an interlocutory order or decree in a circuit court of the United States, or other court having jurisdiction under the laws of the United States to hear and decide in the first instance cases arising under the patent laws, in a case in which an appeal may be taken from the final decree of such court to the United States court of patent appeals, an injunction or restraining order shall be granted, or refused, or continued, or vacated, or modified, or retained without modification after motion to modify the same, an appeal may be taken from such order or decree by the party aggrieved to the United States court of patent appeals: Provided, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the service of the notice of entry of such order or decree; and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed unless otherwise ordered by that court, or the United States court of patent appeals, or a judge thereof, during the pendency of such appeal.

SEC. 8. That the chief justice and the associate judges of the United States court of patent appeals shall each exercise the same powers in term and vacation in the allowance of appeals, supersedeas orders, and other matters incidental to the jurisdiction and business of the court as are now exercised by the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States in relation to the business and jurisdiction of that court.

SEC. 9. That the decisions of the United States court of patent appeals in all cases within its appellate jurisdiction shall be final, except that it shall be competent for the Supreme Court of the United States to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to it for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as though it had been carried by appeal or writ of error from the trial court directly to the Supreme Court.

SEC. 10. That whenever any case shall have been certified from the United States court of patent appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, by certiorari or otherwise, it shall be, upon its determination by the Supreme Court, remanded to the circuit court of the United States or other court in which it originated for further proceedings to be taken in pursuance of such determination. And in every case determined by the United States court of patent appeals upon appeal or writ of error the case shall be remanded to the circuit court of the United States, or other court from whence it came, for further proceedings to be taken in pursuance of such determination.

SEC. 11. That all appeals and writs of error in cases in which appellate jurisdiction is by this act conferred upon the United States court of patent appeals which shall have been pending without hearing in the United States circuit courts of appeals or other courts of appellate jurisdiction for less than three calendar months prior to the taking effect of this act shall be transferred from such circuit courts of appeals or other courts to the United States court of patent appeals and be heard and determined in that court as though they had been taken there from the trial courts by appeal or writ of error without further payment for certifying the record or any new or additional docket or calendar fees; all other appeals and writs of error in cases in which appellate jurisdiction is by this act conferred upon the United States court of patent appeals which shall be pending in the United States circuit courts of appeals or other courts of appellate jurisdiction at the time of the taking effect of this act shall remain and be heard and determined by the courts in which they may be pending, respectively, as though this act had not been passed.

SEC. 12. Then after the taking effect of this act no appeal or writ of error shall be taken from any circuit court or other court of the United States to any United States circuit court of appeals or other appellate court in any case in which an appeal or writ of error may be taken to the United States court of patent appeals under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 13. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 14. That this act shall take effect and be in force on the — day of ———, 19—.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HOH, QUILEUTE, AND OZETTE TRIBES OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 5269) to provide for allotments to certain members of the Hoh, Quileute, and Ozette tribes of Indians in the State of Oregon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to allot on the Quinaiult Reservation, Wash., under the provisions of the allotment laws of the United States, all members of the Hoh, Quileute, and Ozette tribes of Indians in Washington who may elect to take allotments on the Quinaiult Reservation rather than on the reservations set aside for these tribes, but the allotments authorized shall be made from the surplus lands on the Quinaiult Reservation after the allotments to the Indians thereon have been completed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS FOR RESERVOIRS.

The bill (S. 6808) granting lands for reservoirs, and so forth, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It extends the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910," approved March 3, 1909, which authorized the Secretary of the Interior to grant to railway companies lands in Indian reservations for reservoirs, material or ballast pits, or for the purpose of planting and growing trees to protect their lines of railway, to any lands which have been allotted in severalty to any individual Indian under any law or treaty, but which have not been conveyed to the allottee with full power of alienation; that the damages and compensation to be paid to any Indian allottee shall be ascertained and fixed in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct and shall be paid by the railway company to the Secretary; and that the damages and compensation paid to the Secretary of the Interior by the railway company taking any such land shall be paid by the Secretary to the allottee sustaining the damages.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF JOHN HOFFMAN.

The bill (S. 6747) for the relief of the heirs of John Hoffman, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $1,200 to the heirs of John Hoffman, in full settlement and payment for the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 27, township 115 north, range 17 west, in the State of Minnesota, on account of the land having heretofore been patented to the State of Minnesota, and it directs the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and determine to whom the money should be paid and what proportions thereof to the persons as heirs of John Hoffman, and that his determination thereof shall be final.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGES IN NEW MEXICO.

The bill (H. R. 20835) authorizing the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico to assign the said judges to the several judicial districts of the Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It vests the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico with power and authority to assign from time to time, as they may deem proper, any or either of the said judges to any or either of the respective judicial districts of the Territory, and each judge, after assignment, shall reside in the district to which, for the time being, he may be assigned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGEPORT NATIONAL BANK, BRIDGEPORT, OHIO.

The bill (H. R. 5272) for the relief of the Bridgeport National Bank, Bridgeport, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem, in favor of the Bridgeport National Bank, Bridgeport, Ohio, United States 5 per cent coupon bond for $1,000, with interest from February 1, 1899, to the date of its maturity, the bank to file a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of the bond and interest due thereon.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to consume unnecessary time, but I should like to know something about the nature of the bill.

Mr. BURTON. It is in relation to a thousand-dollar bond which was lost by this bank. The bill proposes to pay the amount of the bond with interest. It is only one bond, a 5 per cent coupon bond issued under the act of January 14, 1875, numbered 19649, for $1,000, with interest from February 1, 1899, to the date of its maturity. Provision is made for an indemnity bond in the penal sum of twice the amount of the bond in case it should be presented for payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR H. BARNES.

The bill (S. 1318) for the relief of Arthur H. Barnes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Arthur H. Barnes, of Marshall, Mo., $68.06, salary due him as chaplain Sixth Missouri Infantry, war with Spain, from July 1 to July 15, 1898.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CERTAIN DESERT LANDS IN UTAH.

The bill (S. 6093) providing for the granting and patenting to the State of Utah desert lands formerly in the Uinta Indian Reservation, in Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is not present. I wish he could be present when this matter is taken up.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Utah left the Chamber perhaps twenty minutes ago. When he went out he said he was anxious that the bill should be considered. Inasmuch as a bill in which the Senator from Wyoming is interested immediately following has substantially the same status, possibly I will answer in place of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to this in order that we may avoid further embarrassment. The acts admitting Idaho, Utah, and perhaps Wyoming, although I have not examined the latter, contain this provision. After granting the various lands to the State, it says:

The said State of Utah shall not be entitled to any further or other grants of land for any purpose than as expressly provided in this act.

A short time ago Idaho was making an effort to obtain some lands under the same circumstances, and the matter was sent to the department by the committee, and a legal opinion was returned saying that under that restriction no further grant of lands could be made to the State. The department did not say that a grant might not be made to an institution within the State. The language of this bill is that the lands shall be granted to the State. If the department is correct in holding that the prohibition contained in the admission act that no further grant of land shall be made directly to the State, then it is just possible that the Senator from Utah would want to have this grant of land to institutions within the State, which would not be within the prohibition of the statute.

I had never supposed for a moment that we were not free to make further grants of land to a State. There are a number of bills on the calendar, and some before committees, proposing to make such grants. Therefore I think we ought to look into it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the Senator will find, upon looking into the matter, that the provision in the act to which he refers does not apply to the proposition contained in these two bills. That the report from the Department of the Interior would not apply to it is evident from its letter in regard to this very legislation. Of course, this sort of legislation could not be made effective by making a grant to institutions in the State, because this land is not to be taken for any purpose except to bring it under the Carey Act.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is this a Carey Act proposition?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is a Carey Act proposition.

Mr. HEYBURN. Pure and simple?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Pure and simple, except that it is to allow the Carey Act to be applied to certain Indian reservation lands to which it would not otherwise be applicable. That is the pure and simple proposition in both bills, and that only.

Mr. HEYBURN. I give my support freely to all propositions to place land under the Carey Act.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no proposition in either of these two bills except to place these lands, formerly in Indian reservations, under the Carey Act.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I shall certainly interpose no objection. I wanted to call attention to it in order that we might have it in mind in legislating along these lines.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CERTAIN DESERT LANDS IN WYOMING.

That the provisions of section 4 of an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, approved August 18, 1894, and the acts amendatory thereof, approved June 11, 1896, and March 3, 1901, respectively, be, and are hereby, extended over and shall apply to the desert lands included within the limits of the ceded portions of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in Wyoming: Provided, That before a patent shall issue for any of the lands aforesaid under the terms of the said act approved August 18, 1894, and amendments thereto, the State of Wyoming shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $1.25 per acre for the lands so patented, and the money so paid shall be subject to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians residing on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect," approved March 3, 1905.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEDEWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA SIOUX INDIANS.

The bill (S. 5121) for the restoration of annuities to the Medewakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUILDINGS FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, ETC.

The bill (S. 6382) to provide buildings for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor, was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks that the bill be passed over.

Mr. SCOTT subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that a friend of mine asked that Senate bill 6382 go over on account of my being absent from the Senate Chamber. I should like to call it up, and I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "thirty," to insert "and streets included therein;" on page 2, line 5, after the word "Columbia," to insert "and for other governmental purposes;" in line 9, after the word "apparatus," to insert "power;" and in line 10, after the word "approaches," to insert "and which plans shall be submitted to and approved by Congress," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of State, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected, upon squares numbered 226, 227, 228, 229, and 230, and streets included therein, in the city of Washington, a suitable and commodious fireproof building, or buildings, whichever in their opinion may best meet the requirements of their respective departments, said building or buildings to be for the use and accommodation of the departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor, including all of their bureaus and offices now occupying quarters in the District of Columbia, and for other governmental purposes, and to be constructed in accordance with plans to be procured, based upon accurate estimates, providing for the erection of said building or buildings complete in all details, including heating and ventilating apparatus, power, elevators, and approaches, and which plans shall be submitted to and approved by Congress.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 2, line 12, before the words "per centum," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the supervision of the construction of said building or buildings shall be placed in charge of an officer of the Government especially qualified for the duty, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of State, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, subject to the approval of the head of the department in which such officer is employed, who shall receive for his additional services an increase of 10 per cent of his present salary, such increase to be paid out of the appropriation for the building or buildings herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 3, line 23, after the word "at," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "not exceeding twelve;" and on page 3, line 1, after the word "appropriated," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for the preparation of the plans for said building or buildings herein provided for is hereby made available.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the cost of the construction of said building or buildings, complete, is hereby fixed at not exceeding $12,000,000, which amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for the preparation of the plans for said building or buildings herein provided for is hereby made available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from West Virginia have the kindness to explain the necessity for the sum appropriated by this legislation. I know that the public buildings around Washington are somewhat congested, and relief is necessary. But here is a proposition to expend $12,000,000. We ought not to pass it through this body in a minute without something being said by the Senator in charge of the bill explanatory of it.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana is probably aware of the fact that in the last public-buildings act there was an appropriation of $2,500,000 to buy the blocks enumerated in the pending bill, on which to put up these buildings for the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the State Department. The ground has been acquired, the money has been paid, and title has passed to the United States, and within that appropriation.

Now, the object in passing this bill is to enable the House to determine whether, if the committee report a public-buildings bill, this will be included in that measure, or whether they will conclude to pass it in a separate bill. If the Senator from Indiana had taken the time to investigate, which time, I suppose, he does not have to spare, as is the case with most of us, he would have found that the Government is paying excessive rents for buildings occupied by it in which to do the government work properly, and those buildings are in all parts of the city. Some of the offices are separated by a distance of a half mile or a mile, I may say. There is nothing, in my opinion, that demands the attention of Congress more than suitable buildings for the departments in which they may do the business of the country that comes to them.

An appropriation of $12,000,000 may seem large, but we are not building for to-day. We have to provide buildings that will be suitable for the Government one or two or three hundred years from now.

I have often suggested that we should pass a bill authorizing the sale of $100,000,000 of bonds from time to time as it was necessary for them to be issued, for the purpose of erecting buildings for the use of the Government. Those bonds could be very readily floated at 2 per cent, whereas the Government is now paying anywhere from 10 to 17 per cent on money invested by private individuals in buildings that the Government rents.

That to a business man looks like very poor business, and the hope of these great departments is that they can get their offices together and have a home. Especially is that true of the State Department, where the ministers and ambassadors and foreign representatives have business, so that we may have a place where they can be met and where we shall feel that the dignity of this great country of ours is not humiliated by the quarters the State Department occupies.

The Department of Justice has no home at all, let me say. It is renting a few old buildings on K street and in other parts of the city. The Department of Commerce and Labor is in the same condition.

I hope the Senate will pass the bill without a dissenting vote, so that it may go to the House, and that we may either in the public-buildings bill or in a separate bill secure an appropriation at least to inaugurate the plan and get the specifications, so that these buildings may be started.

I think the junior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] possibly can say a word that will help the bill through, which I hope he will do, as I know he was very much interested in it when he was Secretary of State, as he has been since he has been in the Senate.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I can say to the Senator from Indiana that although this bill appeared to be passing along without much consideration, that results from the fact that the subject has received long-continued, repeated, and exhaustive consideration in committee and elsewhere heretofore. It is now, I should think, seven or eight years since the Congress authorized a new building for the Department of Justice. Competition was held and the design was selected. But by the time that was done it had become quite obvious that with the broadening out of the functions of the Department of Justice the building proposed would be inadequate.

For a number of years that department was located at several different places in the city of Washington. The lawyers would be at one place, the books in another, the clerks in another, and the papers in another. There were seven places four or five years ago; I do not know how many more there are now.

The plan was secured, and the construction of a new building was authorized by Congress, and the money was appropriated for it on the occasion of the old building of the Department of Justice, which was on Pennsylvania avenue opposite the northern end of the Treasury, being condemned as unsafe, so that the department had to abandon its building. The need for a building for the department has been continually growing greater as we impose more and more duties on it. It is not only very expensive in rentals, but it is very injurious to efficiency. We are not getting effective work because of the department being so scattered.

The State Department has now less room than was provided for it when the State, War, and Navy building was built more than thirty years ago. The enlarged requirements of the War Department and the Navy Department have been crowding the State Department, until three or four years ago it had only about 60 per cent of the room originally allotted to it back in the seventies. The State Department has pushed out into other buildings. The building across on Seventeenth street is occupied by it, and it has now put quite a number of bureaus over in the Trust Company building on Fifteenth street. Confidential and important papers are scattered about in those different buildings, so that it is exceedingly difficult to do the work of the department.

The Department of Commerce and Labor was created a number of years ago, and Congress never did give it a building. It never had a building. It has been wandering about the city, finding rooms to rent wherever it could.

I think the Senator from West Virginia is very moderate in his statement that this subject was determined by Congress when the appropriation for the purchase of the land was made. That question was up before Congress a number of times. The measure passed this body, I think, three times.

Mr. SCOTT. Three times.

Mr. ROOT. And it was reported out of the committee in the House a number of times. Finally, after going through the process of incubation and of long-continued consideration and discussion, both Houses reached the conclusion that this had to be done. Accordingly they appropriated for the land; the land has been purchased, and now the business of the Government is suffering every day that we do not go on and complete the transaction. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, this bill carries $12,000,000, which is a large sum, but, in my judgment, it ought to pass. It came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds without any opposition. Heretofore, at a previous session of Congress, a subcommittee heard the facts in regard to these three different departments, and Congress provided for the purchase of the ground. I believe we paid in the neighborhood of three or four million dollars for the ground. When Congress agreed to purchase the land on which to locate these buildings it doubtless contemplated that appropriations would follow for the purpose of erecting a suitable building or buildings thereon.

Mr. President, it is true that the bill carries a large sum, but the Department of Justice to-day, we all know, is without a sufficient home to take care of it. The building where the Department of Justice is located is a disgrace to the people of the United States. We know that the Department of War, the Department of State, and the Navy Department are all in the same building, and it is impossible at this time to secure enough room there to take care of those departments.

I agree fully with the Senator from West Virginia that this bill ought to pass, and there ought not to be any opposition to it. But I do not agree to the proposition that hereafter we ought to pass a bill in order to erect public buildings providing for $100,000,000 of bonds. I believe by a careful and prudent management of our financial affairs we can erect the public buildings and pay for them out of the current revenues of the Government without increasing the bonded indebtedness of the United States.

I understand that if this measure passes it will take probably from three to five years to complete these buildings. The architect is to draw a plan and submit that plan to Congress, and Congress must approve it. In my judgment, the bill is meritorious, and it ought to have the unanimous support of the entire Senate.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I confess I am very much interested in the remarks of the Senator from Georgia. He says that he is opposed to the issuance of bonds to pay for these buildings, and so am I. I believe we ought to pay our bills as we go along, barring, perhaps, the expense of the canal or some other large improvement which may be called for in the shape of the development of waterways.

I sit here and see small appropriations made, and I think perhaps we can meet them out of the current income of the Government; but when we come to appropriations of $12,000,000 I am led to wonder whether we are not paying out more than we will receive. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia if the grand aggregate of our appropriations is not, in his judgment, likely to exceed this year by a very large sum the amount of our income?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator, perhaps, is just as well able to answer that question as I would be. I would provide for these buildings, as we have already $2,463,000 invested in the land. As a matter of course we lose the interest on that, and we are paying rent for buildings that these departments are occupying. As a business man it looks like very poor business to me to allow the land to lie there without putting these buildings on it, and you can not put the buildings there without an appropriation.

I would suggest to the Senator that there might be a way if we would cut off putting up public buildings all over the country in small cities of two or three thousand inhabitants, where the total rent paid by the Government does not exceed two or three hundred dollars, and they get light and heat. Then when we put up a public building costing $80,000 or $100,000 we have to put a janitor there at $600 a year, and we have to put light and heat in that building. There is not much economy in that. I am willing to cut such buildings as that out of the public-buildings bill and appropriate that money where it is needed. That is business.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from West Virginia that I have been appealed to by cities in my own State to ask for an appropriation this year for public buildings, and my answer has been emphatically, "No, sir; I will not ask for an appropriation for Vermont this year; we are trying to live within our income." Much as I would like to see everything that we ought to have provided for, I want to ask a question as I go along, whether we are not exceeding our income. Are we not facing a deficit at the end of the first fiscal year of the present administration?

I am not making these remarks because I propose to vote against this bill, but I do feel that as we go through these appropriation bills we ought to carry out the principle as far as we can that we will not spend more than we earn. That is my education, and I want to see it applied to the running of the Government. When we get to it, the Government is simply an aggregation of business enterprises brought together here. I should like to have a measure of economy developed which I sometimes feel does not exist in Congress, because when we get through with the aggregate of all these appropriations I want to see them come pretty nearly within our income; and if we can not bring them there, I should like to see a little paring done, even though it may seem to be overprudent.

I wish I might know, as the Senator from West Virginia suggests, that the Government may borrow all the money it wanted at 2 per cent. That is not my idea of the case to-day. If we have a deficit for two or three years, I think it will be very difficult indeed for us to borrow money at 2 per cent. It is not in the market to-day, as I understand it, and I do not think that we can see it if we continue the large measure of expenditures now indulged in.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from West Virginia, and possibly also of my colleague, who is on the Appropriations Committee. What is the anticipation as to the time when all this money will have to be expended? It will not all have to be expended in one year.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no; the Supervising Architect is behind now two or three years with his plans and specifications in drawing them for buildings that have already been authorized. The authorization here, you will notice at the close of the bill, is for only so much of this money as will prepare the plans and specifications. In all probability it will be five or six years before the entire appropriation is needed.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator, Is it not true that this bill does not appropriate $12,000,000, but that hereafter, as the money is needed at each session of Congress, the amount will be appropriated for the purpose of completing the work?

Mr. SCOTT. That is it exactly.

Mr. WARREN. I am glad that statement has been made, for, however this Senate bill may read, it should be well understood that practically we are simply authorizing the limit of expense which these buildings may cost, and they have to be appropriated for hereafter, in appropriation bills from time to time, and the state of the Treasury will of course be considered.

Regarding the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont, as to our income and outgo, I doubt if anyone can tell to-day whether the appropriations are going to be kept within the limit of our current revenues this year or not. If we may believe the approximates and calculations being made at the Treasury Department, we shall keep within our income if we proceed with the same economy that we have in those appropriation bills that have so far this session been reported. The first two bills passed were in aggregate something like $8,000,000 less than the two similar bills of the year before. Other appropriation bills may have exceeded by a few hundred thousand dollars in some cases, and some have been less, but unless the rivers and harbors bill and the naval appropriation bill—the two that are the most likely to be large in amount and where there is the greatest probability perhaps of overrunning—shall exceed what we expect they may contain, and if we shall get from the tax on corporations what may be reasonably expected, with the present income that the internal revenue and the new tariff law is affording us, our outgo will be well inside of the income of the Government during the year.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that on the first six appropriation bills the amount was $11,000,000 less than the appropriations last year.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, Senators are mistaken if they imagine that I asked the question a few moments ago in a spirit of hostility to the general purpose of the bill. I have known for some time of the condition of our public buildings in this city with reference to the necessities of the public business. We have a number of ambulatory departments in Washington. Visitors to the city do not find them at the same place on two successive occasions. I am in favor of suitable quarters for these great departments.

My question was designed to direct attention to the large amount of money carried in the bill and which was going through without explanation or discussion. It is claimed that this bill does not appropriate. I think that is an error. Section 3 expressly provides for an amount—not exceeding $12,000,000, which amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for the preparation of the plans for said building or buildings herein provided for is hereby made available.

These are words of appropriation. I do not know that it makes very much difference whether we appropriate now or later. It only occurred to me that the sum was too large. It is more than twice as much as was put into the Library building. It is three or four times as much as the Senate Office Building cost.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PARK CITY, UTAH.

The bill (S. 6643) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Park City, Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is a bill for the correction of a military record. The party served three years and received an honorable discharge. This bill is for the purpose of giving him a pensionable status from the date of the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUBMARINE SIGNALS.

The bill (S. 6603) authorizing the establishment of submarine signals was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to establish under the direction and supervision of the Light-House Board such submarine signal aids to navigation at points along the seacoast line of the United States or in the waters of the Great Lakes as may, in his opinion, be considered advisable or necessary, and appropriates for such purposes $100,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who reported this bill, to kindly make an explanation of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this bill was given very careful consideration by the Committee on Commerce. I was directed to report it. I confess that I had not looked into the matter very closely at that time. As I understand, this is a device that is of very great value to vessels along the coast, particularly in foggy weather. The sound from our existing methods, bells and all that sort of thing, is not conveyed in foggy weather so that the direction from which it comes can be ascertained, and vessels have been lost because of that fact. Submarine signals convey the sound directly to the vessels, and there is no question on the part of the navigators as to where it comes from. Such signals have been tested to a very considerable extent and are strongly recommended by the Department of Commerce and Labor and by other officials who have looked into the subject. I think such a system is of the very greatest possible value to our shipping interests, and I, for that reason, support the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVIGABLE WATERS WITHIN CITY LIMITS.

The bill (S. 6118) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported to the bill by the Committee on Commerce will be stated.

Mr. CLAY. Let the bill first be read at length, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, this bill was introduced by me on the request of the government of the city of New York, in order to remedy a certain power in the War Department and to deal with a situation that occasionally occurs and which does now exist in one or two places in the city of New York.

When little bayous or arms of navigable waters run out into the land, but are not a connecting link with any other piece of water and are not thoroughfares, the growth of a city frequently leaves the little water running into the land a mere center of disease; the water becomes polluted; there is no current through it; and the necessities of the land commerce of the city make it much more desirable to bridge it over or to fill it up than to take it for the purposes of commerce. There is one such situation that I know of now, where it is exceedingly desirable upon all grounds to cut the end off of one of these little vermiform appendices existing in the city of New York. That led the last administration of New York to make a formal request that such power be conferred upon the Secretary of War. As that administration was about going out, I waited until the present administration came in, and asked further consideration of it by the present city government, and they concurred.

It is an act which merely confers power upon the Secretary of War to deal with such a situation when he finds it to be for the best interests of the United States and not injurious to commerce. I should think we might well go that far.

Mr. BACON. If I caught the reading of the bill correctly, it is limited to bayous and other waters which are wholly within a certain jurisdiction.

Mr. ROOT. Waters which are wholly within the limits of a certain city.

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce will now be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, beginning in line 3, to strike out "That after section 10 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1899, the following be inserted: 'Provided, however;'" and on the same page, in line 9, after the words "form a," to strike out "connection" and insert "connecting link," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That where a river or other waterway, which does not form a connecting link between other navigable waters of the United States, lies wholly within the limits of a single city, the legislature of the State within which it lies, or the proper city authorities to whom the legislature of the State has delegated or may in the future delegate its powers over said river or waterway, may, when the duly approved plans for the city beautification, extension, or sanitation, or when its commercial interests so require, obstruct the navigation of said river or other waterway by closing all, or a portion, of the same, or by building structures in or over it: Provided, That the Secretary of War is satisfied that such obstruction is necessary for the best interests of the United States and that the location and plans for the proposed work or works have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the cost of such work or works and of all claims for damages and injuries that may arise in consequence of its or their construction or maintenance shall be borne by the said city.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to confer upon state and municipal authorities certain powers with respect to navigable waters wholly within city limits."

CUSTOM-HOUSE BROKERS' LICENSES.

The bill (S. 6173) to license custom-house brokers was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I will explain this bill. It is designed to give the public authorities of the United States some control over quite a large class of persons who represent the public, or individuals of the public, so that the public may be protected.

The custom-house business is a mystery, quite as much so as the business of any of our courts, or even more so. Of all the hundreds of Americans who are going to Europe and coming back as travelers and who are bringing in goods from Europe, very few know anything about the intricacies—the manifold intricacies—existing under our complicated statutes. They are entirely in the hands of brokers. No one of us can do anything in the custom-house without employing a broker.

As far back as twenty-six or twenty-seven years ago, when I was dealing with these laws in the city of New York, every now and then there would come up a case where a broker had been "crooked" with his employer. The Government can protect itself. If the broker does anything wrong with the Government, the custom-house authorities can refuse to do business for him or to permit him to come in, but they have no authority to give any protection or any redress to any individual who has been wrongfully dealt with by the man whom he has trusted. The present customs authorities of the Government are quite urgent to have some such provision as this; its terms have been pretty carefully guarded, and I think it is quite important that we should adopt the provision.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I fully realize the importance of that kind of legislation. I myself once had a personal experience which demonstrated the necessity of some such regulation.

Mr. ROOT. As it is now, there is no control over these custom-house brokers at all. Anyone, any rapscallion who can get somebody to confide in him, can go in and rob him in the custom-house. There is none of that salutary control which is exercised over members of the bar, over auctioneers, and over a great many other callings in which the rights of the public ought to be protected.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator this question: Suppose a citizen was undertaking to transact his own business, would the bill interfere with his doing so?

Mr. ROOT. That is expressly provided for by the bill.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand that there is a provision in the bill allowing him to do so, without approval?

Mr. ROOT. There is such a provision.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if the effect of this bill is not likely to make the expense of doing business at the custom-houses on the frontier very much larger than it now is?

Mr. ROOT. No; I think not. There is an express provision that—

This act shall not be so construed as to prohibit any person from transacting business at a custom-house pertaining to his own importations.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; but the great bulk of the importers of the country do not live contiguous to a custom-house, and they are obliged to have some one else attend to their business for them. It seems to me that if a custom-house broker is to be licensed and if no one can do the business under a general power of attorney the result may be that the custom-house brokers will double their charges for doing this service and impose upon the country a very large unnecessary burden.

Mr. ROOT. It is quite simple for the people who do the business to obtain licenses.

Mr. PAGE. Well, we have been doing it without such a law for more than a hundred years, and I should like to know what has arisen of late that seems to make such a requirement essential for all of the little custom-houses on the border.

Mr. ROOT. I do not suppose that the business transactions of the small custom-houses furnishes the occasion for such a provision, but the enormous mass of business which is conducted at the large custom-houses makes it necessary to have such a provision. It may be that there would be some slight inconveniences to the small custom-houses; but I think they ought to be willing to endure a little inconvenience in order to prevent very serious evils affecting the great mass of the customs business of the country.

Mr. PAGE. My own experience is that custom-house brokers are quite extravagant in their charges, and if now they are to be allowed to make a still larger charge than they have done for the past fifty years, by reason of this bill, I do not know but what we are discommoding and burdening a very large number in order that the custom-house at New York may be provided with licensed brokers. I somewhat question the advisability of this bill. It may be all right if the Senator from New York says it is, and I take his word for it; but I am sure from my experience that it is not unlikely to impose upon importers at the smaller custom-houses a burden which perhaps they ought not to be obliged to bear.

Mr. ROOT. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it involves no expense or charge. Anybody who wants to do business at a custom-house can go in and get his license. It is made the duty of the collector at every port to issue, upon application, to any person being a citizen of the United States, a license to transact business. It will be no more than one of the papers which are involved in getting through an entry or an invoice.

Mr. PAGE. Yes; but, to illustrate, take the State of New York, for instance. They have no custom-house at Albany or at Schenectady or at Syracuse—I do not know but that they have one at Syracuse; but many of the larger interior cities have no custom-house, and the business must be done at the border. A man living at Ogdensburg, at Fort Covington, or at Niagara, can attend to his own customs business, while a man living in the interior—and that is where the great bulk of the importers live—must be subjected to the expense of procuring a custom-house broker; and I do not know but that some protection ought to be given to him. It is a matter to which I have not given large consideration; but, as it strikes me now, it may make quite a heavy burden upon the smaller importers in the interior cities.

Mr. ROOT. I can not see how it will make any difference at all.

Mr. PAGE. If you limit the competition among the men who are to do that work, I submit to the Senator from New York that, by eliminating the competition, you are likely to make larger the charges of those who remain in the business.

Mr. ROOT. But it does not limit the competition, because anybody can get the license. If a man has never in his life had but one invoice to enter, it is a perfectly simple thing for him to get that license as a part of the papers under which he makes that entry.

Mr. PAGE. And that license is obtainable where?

Mr. ROOT. At the custom-house where he makes the entry. Every collector is authorized to issue licenses.

Mr. PAGE. And does the bill provide what must be paid for that license?

Mr. ROOT. It does not authorize any charge whatever. It provides—

That the collector shall, upon application, issue to any person being a citizen of the United States a license to transact business as a custom-house broker.

Mr. PAGE. I yield the objection I have, although I still have doubt about the advisability of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 2, line 16, at the beginning of the line, it is proposed to strike out "court of customs appeals" and insert "United States circuit court for the circuit in which the collection district is situated;" and in the same section, page 3, line 1, after the word "said," to strike out "court of customs appeals" and insert "United States circuit court for the circuit in which the collection district is situated," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That any licensed custom-house broker aggrieved by the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury may, within thirty days thereafter, and not afterwards, apply to the United States circuit court for the circuit in which the collection district is situated for a review of such decision. Such application shall be made by filing in the office of the clerk of said court a petition praying relief in the premises. Thereupon the court shall immediately give notice in writing of such application to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall forthwith transmit to said court the record and evidence taken in the case, together with a statement of his decision therein. The filing of such application shall operate as a stay of the revocation of the license. The decision of said United States circuit court for the circuit in which the collection district is situated shall be final and the proceedings remanded to the Secretary of the Treasury for further action to be taken in accordance with the terms of the decree.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALTER ROAD, DETROIT, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 18593) to authorize the transfer of the government highway, known as the Alter road, to the city of Detroit, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan whether or not the jurisdiction over this strip of land was ever ceded by the State of Michigan to the United States, or whether it was originally reserved when the State was organized? The reason I ask is that it seems to me that if there ever has been any formal cession of jurisdiction by the State to the United States, there ought to be some language in the bill to recede it.

Mr. BURROWS. The building of the light-house at the head of the Detroit River some years ago made it necessary for the Government to obtain a right of way, or a strip of land by which they could go to and return from the light-house. So they obtained a deed for that purpose. Now, it is proposed to recede this strip of land to the city of Detroit. The city, by resolution of the council, asked that this be done, and they are to maintain the road, improve it, and keep it open, of course, as a highway.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not catch the point of my inquiry. I understood all that from the reading of the bill; but I understand the bill simply to deal with the question of title, whereas the question of jurisdiction might be involved, and it usually is involved, when there has been action under which the Government gets a piece of property within a State. Even if the Government builds a court-house or anything else the jurisdiction over the land is ceded to the United States. I did not know—and I asked for information—what was the origin of this title, whether it was a title which was reserved to the United States when the Territory was converted into a State, or whether it had ever been formally ceded by the State of Michigan to the United States Government. It seems to me that a bill of this kind ought to be definite and precise on that subject, because a great deal may depend upon the question of jurisdiction. Criminal questions will be dependent upon it, and all that; and, for that reason, I asked the question of the Senator from Michigan, whether the governmental jurisdiction over this strip of land had ever been ceded by the State of Michigan to the Government of the United States.

Mr. BURROWS. My understanding is from the report that it has been ceded.

Mr. BACON. Well, if it has been ceded, Mr. President, the question of a recession ought to be stated with more definite precision.

Mr. BURROWS. The Government of the United States obtained title to this strip of land—the Senator understands that—for the purposes of this light-house, to go to and from the light-house. The city has grown until this strip of land comes within the city, and now it is proposed that this shall be turned over to the city, at the request of the city, as a public highway.

Mr. BACON. I understand that fully, but I am extremely unfortunate that I can not convey my idea to the Senator from Michigan. I wanted to know whether jurisdiction over this property has ever been ceded by the State of Michigan to the United States.

Mr. BURROWS. The jurisdiction of course goes back to the city.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 4179) authorizing the Omaha tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, line 9, after the word "thereon," to insert "with authority to allow interest upon such items as the court shall deem proper," so as to read:

That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Omaha tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims * * *; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Omaha tribe against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim which the United States may have against said Omaha tribe of Indians, and to enter judgment thereon, with authority to allow interest upon such items as the court shall deem proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 25, after the word "Indians," to insert "to prosecute their claims under this act," so as to read:

Such action shall make the Omaha tribe of Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, * * * and the said petition may be verified by the attorney employed by the said Omaha Indians, to prosecute their claims under this act, under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, after the word "attorneys," to insert "employed," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree such reasonable fees as the court shall find shall be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the Omaha tribe of Indians, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said Omaha tribe of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VETERINARY SERVICE OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 1692) to increase the efficiency of the veterinary service of the army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, on page 2, line 13, after the word "lieutenant," to strike out "mounted," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That veterinarians now in the army who have served honorably and faithfully as such not less than fifteen years shall be the first persons eligible to appointment under the provisions of this act and may be appointed without regard to any of the restrictions thereof, and if any such veterinarians now in service shall have reached the age of 64 years before the approval of this act the President may appoint them veterinarians and immediately place them on the retired list with the retired pay of a first lieutenant.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I think the word "mounted" occurs in other places in the bill. I ask that it be struck out wherever it occurs in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming what the effect of this bill is as to the capacity of the veterinarians for promotion? What rank does this bill throw open to the veterinarian?

Mr. WARREN. In one sense it gives no rank as such to them. It gives the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant for the first ten years, and after that and with a proper examination the pay, and so forth, of a first lieutenant. The bill provides for taking in the old veterinarians or contract veterinary surgeons and employees after passing proper examination—a few of the oldest ones without examination. As to the new class admitted, the bill provides the age at which they shall be admitted; that they must be graduates of a veterinary college; that they must pass a prescribed army examination; that they must have served ten years as second lieutenants before being promoted to first lieutenants, and they go no higher than first lieutenant during their service.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator is satisfied, I assume, that the expression—

All veterinarians so appointed shall be on the same footing as that of commissioned officers of the army in respect to tenure of appointment, retirement, pensions, increase of pay—is so limited by the specific provisions of the bill that it can not apply to increase in rank?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator I have depended upon the War Department, and that is the language, as I understand it, approved by the Secretaries of War who succeeded the Senator from New York. I have assumed, and I think from the language that it does, that it provides what I have said of it as to pay, increase of pay, and tenure of office; that is, the length of office, retirement, pension, and allowances.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if this adds another line of those who are to be retired on half pay, or is the old law in regard to this matter simply reenacted?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this is the condition: Formerly, when we had but few regiments of cavalry, but a small artillery force, and the days of horse doctors, bleeding, condition powders, and so forth, rather than regular veterinary surgeons, we employed men as employees, to be hired and discharged at will. This was unsatisfactory and most expensive in the losses of horse and mule stock. Some years ago, I should say perhaps fifteen, possibly ten, we provided for an examination of the force of men that were then employed, and provided that those who passed the examination should become second lieutenants, so far as concerns the pay, and so forth, exactly as this bill provides; that the others should remain employees.

This bill goes a little further. It provides—and it is a matter of only 42 men altogether proposed for the entire veterinary force—for an expense, in addition to the present expense, of not to exceed $2,700 per annum until after ten years shall have expired for the second lieutenants, when there will be more of them, of course, as first lieutenants than there are now.

But when the change is made it does away with the contract surgeons and the necessity for contract surgeons and employees, and substitutes a regular corps, which, after providing for the present force, is to be only recruited from young men under 27 years of age, who have been graduated from some reputable veterinary college and who shall be examined and pass under the army requirements. These then enter upon the service and serve ten years as second lieutenants, and then, after another successful examination, may be promoted and receive the pay of first lieutenants, retiring finally as first or second lieutenants, as the case may be.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Wyoming is aware, but it is well enough to put it in the RECORD, that the requirements of veterinary colleges to-day are quite as exacting as those of our best medical colleges. These men have to go through a curriculum of the same length, studying substantially the same subjects, in addition to which they get, of course, instruction in the treatment of animals particularly. But when a man is graduated from a veterinary college to-day he has given as much time and as much money to acquire his education as a young man who is graduated from one of our very best medical colleges.

Mr. WARREN. And with the number of horses and the number of mules employed now in the army the salary of these men is a mere bagatelle compared with the losses that may occur unless the army has a competent force of medical men to attend the animals.

Mr. PAGE. The only point I wish to raise is whether we are placing upon the retired list a large number of men who have acted as veterinarians and whom this bill proposes to pension.

Mr. WARREN. Now, I see what the Senator is probably driving at. This bill places no one upon the retired list or "pension roll," as the Senator terms it, except he shall arrive at the proper age and shall have done the proper service, with the exception of two men, one of whom is now 74 or 75 years old and the other 69 to 71. One has served nearly fifty years, the other has served just a little more or less than forty years. They are kept in the service as hired men because of their very valuable services in passing upon purchases of horses. The department wishes to retain them in that service and the bill provides that these two may be retired. Undoubtedly these two would be immediately called back into active service under the law on account of their ripe and varied experience, so valuable in assisting our purchasing officers.

Mr. PAGE. But in the bill it is provided that young men may enter under 27 and when they continue until they are 64 years of age——

Mr. WARREN. They get the same retirement as first or second lieutenants in the army.

Mr. PAGE. That is all right and very proper.

Mr. WARREN. But they can not go higher than the office of first lieutenant.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to know how many there are to-day 50 or 60 years old who have not been commissioned and who may be commissioned under this bill, and in five or ten years passed to the retired list under this bill at half pay.

Mr. WARREN. They are all comparatively young men, aside from the two I have mentioned.

Mr. PAGE. How many men will this bill affect as to retiring on half pay?

Mr. WARREN. I do not know that it affects any except these two, unless they shall have served quite a length of time.

Mr. PAGE. That is all right.

Mr. CLAY. But it will affect those who are appointed hereafter, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. It affects every man appointed hereafter. Every man is affected at 64 years of age, but he comes in at 27 or less and he serves his time from 27 to 64, until he is retired.

Mr. CLAY. A veterinary surgeon at this time is not a commissioned officer at all. He is not entitled to quarters; he is not entitled to a pension; he is not entitled to be retired, and hereafter he will be entitled to quarters, to a pension, and be entitled to all the privileges of a commissioned officer.

Mr. WARREN. Not all the privileges.

Mr. CLAY. That is, those appointed after the passage of this act.

Mr. WARREN. Except he has no rank with other officers when he is with them. But the Senator is both right and wrong. A part of the present force are already virtually second lieutenants by an act of some twelve or fifteen years ago. Still another part are employees or contract surgeons who have none of the privileges that the Senator has enumerated.

Mr. CLAY. Can the Senator give any idea as to how much annual expense it will add to the expenditures of the War Department? I mean not only considering those who will avail themselves of the benefits of this act, but appointments that may be made hereafter; about what additional expense annually will be entailed upon the Government of the United States?

Mr. WARREN. We have a computation, over the signature of Mr. Taft, as Secretary of War, in which he states that if all the veterinarians having more than ten years' service and the additional veterinarians be appointed under the proposed bill, the increased annual expense would be not to exceed $2,700. The only further expense would arise from the increased pay of such veterinarians as would become entitled to it after ten years' service. This bill makes them then first lieutenants, which rank they did not have before.

Mr. CLAY. I understand.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4626. An act for the widening of Sixteenth street NW. at Piney Branch, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 6449. An act permitting the building of a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; and

S. 5125. An act authorizing the creation of an additional land district in the State of Oregon to be known as the "Vale land district."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 4830. An act establishing regular terms of the United States circuit and district courts of the northern district of California at Sacramento, Cal.; and

H. R. 18162. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

EMBASSY, LEGATION, AND CONSULAR BUILDINGS.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to call up, under the rule, the bill H. R. 22312.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22312) providing for the purchase or erection, within certain limits of cost, of embassy, legation, and consular buildings abroad.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire in foreign countries such sites and buildings as may be appropriated for by Congress for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States, and to alter, repair, and furnish the said buildings; suitable buildings for this purpose to be either purchased or erected, as to the Secretary of State may seem best, and all buildings so acquired for the diplomatic service shall be used both as the residences of diplomatic officials and for the offices of the diplomatic establishment: Provided, however, That not more than the sum of $500,000 shall be expended in any fiscal year under the authorization herein made: And provided further, That in submitting estimates of appropriation to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the House of Representatives, the Secretary of State shall set forth a limit of cost for the acquisition of sites and buildings and for the construction, alteration, repair, and furnishing of buildings at each place in which the expenditure is proposed (which limit of cost shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 at any one place) and which limit shall not thereafter be exceeded in any case, except by new and express authorization of Congress.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against this bill. On page 250 of the Rules and Practices of the House I find:

And a bill once rejected, another of the same substance can not be brought in again the same session.

This is from Jefferson's Manual, and as there is no rule of the House upon this question Jefferson's Manual is made a part of the rules of the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, on the 2d of March, at this session, by a yea-and-nay vote of 160 yeas to 84 nays, a bill the substance of which is exactly like this bill was rejected by this House.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think my colleague wishes to make a misstatement. The vote on the only roll call, which was on the motion to adjourn, was 99 to 123.

Mr. PRINCE. Will you be kind enough to look to page 2649 and see what the report of the vote is? The House divided; and there were—ayes 160, noes 84. But that was not a roll call. The vote on the yeas and nays was 99 for the bill and 123 against the bill; and there is the list of the votes and the names of those who voted. After the vote had been taken, a motion was made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] to reconsider the vote by which the action of the committee was agreed to, which was laid upon the table.

Now the question before the House is whether this bill comes under the rule as another "of the same substance." The bill that was introduced under date of December 17, 1909, the one that was rejected by the House, is exactly like the bill that is presented under date of March 7, 1910, with this one exception, which does not go to the substance of the bill. On page 2, line 9, "which limit of cost shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 at any one place." That limits the amount. The substance is exactly the same. That amendment was in order at the time the bill was before the committee and before the committee acted. Now, I have been unable to find any precedent which will warrant the doing of what is sought to be done to-day. I find on page 295 of volume 4 of Hinds's Precedents the following:

A bill having been rejected by the House, a similar, but not identical, bill on the same subject was afterwards held to be in order.

On August 17, 1856, Mr. John Wheeler, of New York, presented a resolution instructing the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill for the support of the army in accordance with the text accompanying the resolution. This new bill was drawn up the same as the army bill, which had already failed, because of differences between the House and Senate concerning a provision relating to the use of troops in Kansas, with the exception that the proviso relating to Kansas was stricken out and three appropriations were changed as to amounts.

There was a question whether troops should be used and the pay for the troops in what was known as the "border war" in Kansas. The House rejected that provision. Afterwards the bill left out that which was the substance, which was the material difference between the two Houses, and another bill came in, and of different substance, and was held in order. But this is the identical bill rejected by the House. The substance is the same. It is not one whit different, because the substance there was whether there shall be appropriations and provisions made for the purchase of embassy sites abroad. That is the substance, that is the essence of the bill—the substance and the essence of the bill—so that the idea whether it shall cost a dollar or a thousand dollars was not at issue, which was whether we shall do that or not.

Now, I regard this motion, or this procedure, as trifling with the House. Why? Because if we vote this bill down to-day, the committee can bring in a bill for $145,000 limit; if we vote it down again, they can bring in another at $140,000; and if we vote that down, it can bring in another at $120,000, and you can go on ad libitum until the session is used up. Now, what is meant by such a proceeding? It means that on the call of committees, on calendar Wednesdays, the House can debate this bill a day and, if the House rejects it, we have stopped the business on the calendar. Next week, when the calendar is called again, the call rests with the same committee, and they can take up the time of the House as they did last time, and so on from week to week, and we can not stop it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will admit that he is mistaken about supposing that the call will rest with the Committee on Foreign Affairs next week?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; for two full days.

Mr. MANN. For two days. It had last Wednesday, and the call rests with it to-day, but not next Wednesday.

Mr. PRINCE. It practically rests with it, because the call of the committees goes so rapidly that the time of this House can be taken up during the session until this matter is disposed of.

But, coming back to the point at issue, I assert that this bill is, in substance, the same as the bill rejected by this House.

Wherein does it differ in substance? The substance is a provision for an embassy. That is the cause of the introduction of the bill. The question whether the cost limit is more or less is one of amendment, that could be determined at that time.

Now let us go a little further. Suppose that it was in a court of justice, and the court had ruled against a cause of action and said it was not a proper cause of action. A demurrer had been filed, the plaintiff had been put out of court because there was no cause of action. Would the court, upon a like bill, presented for a less amount, hold that a reduction of the amount would cure the cause of action and make a different substance, and that the court would take jurisdiction of it? Why, most assuredly not. There is not a lawyer within the sound of my voice but would hold that if the court had ruled it out, if the substance had been tried, another case of the same kind could not receive consideration on the ground that you had reduced the amount.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. Assuming that all the gentleman says is so, I ask what rule does the gentleman refer to that will prevent the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PRINCE. For the benefit of my friend from New York, I will read again from page 250 of Jefferson's Manual:

And a bill once rejected, another of the same substance can not be brought in again the same session.

Mr. SULZER. When was this bill rejected?

Mr. PRINCE. It was rejected on the 2d of March.

Mr. SULZER. Not this bill. The gentleman is in error, and refers to another bill.

Mr. PRINCE. The substance of this bill was rejected then. That bill on that day was the same as the bill to-day, with this exception only, which I declare is not a substantial difference:

Which limit of cost shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 at any one place.

Mr. SULZER. That makes all the difference. This is essentially a different bill, and the rule to which the gentleman refers does not apply.

Mr. PRINCE. Reading further from page 295 of volume 4 of Hinds's Precedents:

Mr. Benjamin Stanton, of Ohio, made the point of order that two army appropriation bills had been disposed of this session, one coming over from last session and failing by difference between the Houses, and the other being defeated in the House. The manual provided that—

"In Parliament, a question once carried can not be questioned again at the same session, but must stand as the judgment of the House; and a bill once rejected, another of the same substance can not be brought in again the same session."

The Speaker said:

"But one bill for the support of the army has been introduced at this session of Congress. The second bill came over from the last session. It was not introduced at this session of Congress. One bill introduced at this session of Congress has been defeated, but the bill embraced by the resolution before the House differs from that bill in the very material manner of wanting the proviso which is the subject-matter of controversy between the two Houses. The language of the manual read by the gentleman—that a bill once rejected, another of the same substance can not be brought in—refers to the provisions of a bill, and not to bills on the same subject. The Chair is of opinion that the resolution is in order."

Undoubtedly that was in order, because the contention was in reference to the portion of the bill making appropriations for the payment of troops to carry on the border war in Kansas. That was a substantial difference, but this is purely a question of difference in the amount of money. The substance has been passed upon, and I insist upon the point of order as against this bill.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have given some consideration to this question, and I wish to submit to the House the results of that consideration.

In the first place, under the practice of this House, Jefferson's Manual is practically obsolete. In the revision of 1880 the Committee on Rules decided to retain the Manual, although, as they said in their report:

Compiled as it was for the use of the Senate exclusively, and made up almost wholly of collations of English parliamentary practice and decisions, it was never especially valuable as an authority in the House of Representatives even in its early history, and for many years past it has been rarely quoted in the House. (5 Hinds's Precedents, sec. 6757.)

My colleague [Mr. PRINCE] relies upon this statement in the Manual:

In Parliament a question once caried can not be questioned again at the same session, but must stand as the judgment of the House. * * * And a bill once rejected, another of the same substance can not be brought in again the same session. (Manual, p. 250.)

On the following page of the Manual, continuing the discussion of this subject, a case is cited in which practically the same bill was brought up a second time at the same session, in the English Parliament, and it was held that this was not any reason for not considering the bill, although it had been rejected before.

It thus appears that even by the Manual and in accordance with its precedents it never was a strict rule of practice of the Parliament that when a bill was rejected it should not, the slightest possible change being made, be considered again at that session.

Therefore, without reference to the rules of the House, which I shall take up later, the Manual is an exceedingly slender authority for the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Rule XXIV, paragraph 4, provides that on the call of committees each committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day and on the House Calendar.

Paragraph 4 of Rule XXVI extends this privilege to bills upon the Union Calendar.

I therefore submit that those rules by their terms are inconsistent with the provision quoted by my colleague [Mr. PRINCE], because if these rules had contemplated that a similar bill should not be brought up in the same session of Congress, they would have provided something like the following:

Any bill upon the calendar, the substance of which has not been presented before to the House at the same session—

And so forth.

Therefore, I believe that any sort of a change makes a new bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. LOWDEN. After I have finished this line of argument.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield for the present.

Mr. LOWDEN. But, Mr. Speaker, even if this contention were overruled, the bill called up to-day is not in substance the bill which it is claimed was rejected a week ago, within the meaning of the Manual. In this connection, I wish to cite the language of an earlier Speaker, contained in section 3283, volume 4, of Hinds's Precedents, in which the Speaker held—

But the Chair agrees with the gentleman from Kentucky that the fact that this bill has passed does not cut off the House from passing another bill on the same subject.

I also wish to cite to the Chair section 3384, volume 4, of Hinds's Precedents.

In this case it appears that on August 17, 1856, Mr. John Wheeler, of New York, presented a resolution instructing the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill for the support of the army, in accordance with the text accompanying the resolution. This new bill was drawn up the same as the army bill, which had already failed, because of differences between the House and Senate concerning a provision relating to the use of troops in Kansas, with the exception that the proviso relating to Kansas was stricken out, and three appropriations were changed as to amounts.

The Speaker said:

The second bill came over from the last session. It was not introduced at this session of Congress. One bill introduced at this session of Congress has been defeated, but the bill embraced by the resolution before the House differs from that bill in the very material manner of wanting the proviso, which is the subject-matter of controversy between the two Houses. The language of the Manual read by the gentleman—that a bill once rejected, another of the same substance can not be brought in—refers to the provisions of a bill, and not to bills on the same subject. The Chair is of opinion that the resolution is in order.

The question, therefore, under these precedents, is whether or not this bill is the same as the bill which was considered by the House last week. If gentlemen will recall what transpired during that consideration they will remember that the principal argument addressed against that bill, one that occupied almost exclusively the time of my colleague and friend, was that there was no limitation as to the cost in any one place. The bill that is called up to-day contains a provision that in no case shall the cost exceed $150,000 in any one place. That was the real point of the opposition to that bill last week.

This new bill presents changes, and the Chair must take into account what the real difference of opinion was last week in deciding whether this is the identical bill which was considered last week, or whether it is a new bill on the same subject, which was held by Speaker Banks to be in order.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield for a suggestion?

Mr. LOWDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The bill that was considered last week provided a limitation of $1,000,000 a year, while the bill now before the House provides for a limitation of $500,000 a year; a substantial change, it seems to me.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Was there not an amendment to the bill of last week providing a limitation of $500,000?

Mr. MANN. The committee reported an amendment, which was never adopted and never considered. The bill that was reported to the House had a provision for $1,000,000 a year, but the amendment was neither agreed to nor considered by the House.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOWDEN. For a question.

Mr. SABATH. The bill that was defeated had no limitation as to the cost of these buildings, but this bill has a limitation.

Mr. LOWDEN. That is true.

Mr. SABATH. No more than $150,000 can be appropriated for any one place by this bill.

Mr. LOWDEN. That is true.

Mr. SABATH. And in that the bills differ.

Mr. LOWDEN. This bill differs from the other one, and that difference was the subject of the real debate on the floor of the House last week, as the gentleman reminds me.

Mr. SABATH. That is a question I raised last week, that there was no limitation as to the cost of the building.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. LOWDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The real objection made to the bill last week as it stood was that there was no limitation made as to the amount that could be spent in any one place, and that was based on an argument at the very foundation of this bill, that under the present conditions the poor man could not accept one of these positions; and the argument was made that if you took a poor man and placed him in a building that cost as much as $500,000 he would not be any better off. Therefore, if you cut the amount to $150,000 it must be admitted that it is a building in which a comparatively poor man could live, and it seems to me it goes to the very essence of the whole question before the House.

Mr. LOWDEN. I think so. I now wish to call the attention of the Chair to section 3385, volume 4, of Hinds's Precedents.

On December 19, 1864, Mr. Speaker Colfax held that a resolution, which the House had laid on the table, might not be presented again unless one or two words were changed to make it in fact a different resolution. This was on the occasion of Mr. Henry Winter Davis, of Maryland, presenting a resolution relating to the power of Congress over foreign affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the citation from the Manual, made by my colleague [Mr. PRINCE], applies equally to a resolution as to a bill, and I have taken pains to look up the difference between the two resolutions upon which Mr. Colfax held that the second one was in order, being different in fact. The only difference is that the word "president" is omitted from one, and in its place the words "executive departments" are inserted. I claim that this precedent is directly in point. I further contend that we must take into account what consideration influenced the minds of the Members last week, and it appears, as it clearly does, that it was the absence of this limit of cost, then this bill is a new bill, and it is in order.

The effect of the bill, as the Chair will readily understand, will be to cut out the principal capitals of the Old World and to enable this country, while it is yet time, to acquire, at a reasonable cost, sites for buildings in Mexico, South America, and the Orient, and it appeared in the debate upon this bill last week that many Members who voted against it were in favor of extending this policy to those countries.

The real question is whether Members who opposed the bill which was considered last week might, with the changes made, consistently support this bill now. If so, for all parliamentary purposes this is a different bill. The questions addressed to me at this time show clearly that Members who opposed the bill which was considered last week are of the opinion that the objections which they found to the bill then pending have been removed from this. The bill is therefore different, and the point of order, I submit, Mr. Speaker, should be overruled and the bill submitted to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard for a moment on the point of order. I think it would be difficult to add anything to the value of the argument just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOWDEN], and it seems to me the precedents are so clear that I venture to suggest that the Chair is called upon to overrule the point of order. The same point of order made in 1856 was as to a bill which differed in no respect from the bill previously rejected by the House in that session, except that it omitted a proviso as to the use of certain troops in Kansas, and the Chair in overruling the point of order on that occasion said that the language of the Manual referred to the provisions of a bill and not to bills on the same subject. Now, if the Chair shall sustain this point of order, it will be hereafter impossible, a bill upon a certain subject having once been rejected, for a bill upon that same subject ever to be in order at the same session of Congress in this House. The proper construction of the rule, as was stated by a previous Speaker, is that the point of order lies to the provisions of a bill. This bill is totally distinct in its provisions from the bill rejected by the House last Wednesday. The chief objection to that bill, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] himself, in the course of a very impassioned address upon the subject, was the fact that it did not limit the cost of any one building. That same objection was stated by gentlemen upon both sides of this House, and in my opinion was the chief burden of complaint. This bill does limit in substance the cost of any one building to $150,000 at any one place, and is as vital and essential a difference in substance from the other bill as any change in a bill well could be.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] said in the course of his argument this morning that if this be held to be a different bill substantially from the one the House has already rejected, hereafter the Committee on Foreign Affairs might, if this second bill is voted down, bring in another bill limiting the cost to $145,000 on next Wednesday, and to $140,000 on the following Wednesday. A gentleman of as much sense and character as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] can not have been in earnest in advancing that argument, because the point of order stated in Jefferson's Manual, which he has attempted to misapply here, would directly apply to any such trivial and inconsequential change as a reduction in the limit from $150,000 to any smaller sum like $140,000 or $130,000. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is substantially different from the other, and therefore I submit that the Chair is called upon to overrule the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is just one point I desire to bring to the attention of the Chair. We have a similar rule that is frequently called into play in the Committee of the Whole House. For instance, if an amendment is offered to a bill and that amendment is rejected, manifestly an amendment in exactly the same language can not again be offered, but the Chair has always held that even though the second amendment were traveling the same line and for the same purpose, yet if it was in point of fact a different amendment, it was in order. Now, the very fact that this relates to the same subject-matter is not the question for consideration, but it is whether it deals with that subject-matter in a substantially different way, so as to present a different bill, and under the practice that we have had in the Committee of the Whole on amendments—and that rule is for the same purpose, to prevent the committee from being unduly burdened with reconsideration of matters—I submit that this bill, being a different bill, substantially, is in order.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the Speaker to the language of Jefferson's Manual, which has already been quoted:

> And a bill once rejected, another of the same substance can not be brought in again the same session.

And the question is whether that means substantially the same or whether it means what it says, "the same substance." The same substance is not something like; it is the same, and when this says the same substance it means a bill identically alike. It does not mean a bill on the same subject-matter. Now, these two bills are very different. One of them provided for an appropriation of $1,000,000. The other provides for an appropriation of $500,000. I should call that a substantial change in the bill and not the same substance. One provided no limitation in figures upon the amount to be expended in any one place and the other makes a limitation of $150,000. Certainly, if these bills had been offered in order as amendments in the Committee of the Whole House on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and it had been in order to offer them and one of them had been voted down, the other would not be construed by the Chair to be the same substance, so that it would not be in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the House should keep in mind the difference in practice that existed in the Commons at the time of the adoption of the rule stated by Jefferson and the existing procedure in this House. My understanding is that bills at that time were brought into Parliament upon a resolution directing a committee to prepare and to report a particular bill to the House for its consideration, and a committee would then be appointed to prepare and report such a bill. The question as to whether a bill in the language of the rule of "the same substance" was to be reported into the House would arise upon the presentation of the resolution directing a committee to prepare such a bill. There was then a distinction, however, that has since been emphasized and has been recognized in this House, not only from the precedents of the House which have been cited, but from the exceptions to this rule to which attention is called by Jefferson's Manual itself. The only two precedents cited are to the effect that bills of "the same substance" have been construed to mean not bills substantially the same, but bills identically the same; and the rule has been narrowed by construction so that a bill to be rejected upon such a point of order as this must not only be substantially the same in form but must be identical in language to the bill which has been rejected. Now, in section 510 of the Manual, which is section 43 of Jefferson's Manual, I read the following:

> In cases of the least magnitude this rule—

That is, a bill of the same substance shall not be presented at the same session—> has not been so strictly and verbally observed as to stop indispensable proceedings altogether. Thus, when the address on the preliminaries of peace in 1782 had been lost by a majority of 1, on account of the importance of the question and smallness of the majority, the same question in substance, though with some words not in the first, and which might change the opinion of some Members, was brought on again and carried, as the motives for it were thought to outweigh the objection of form.

So that as early as 1782, in the House of Commons itself, an address which was of considerable importance to the country, and which had been rejected by a single vote simply by having slight change in the phraseology so as to overcome the objections raised to the address by some of those in opposition, was permitted, despite this well-known rule, to be brought into that session. It seems to me that following that exception these two decisions, which have been cited and referred to several times, have followed what was recognized as the proper exception; that a bill to be subject to the point of order which has been raised must be identical, as well as the same in substance. And, Mr. Speaker, when it is considered how great has been the change in procedure, how many times multiplied have been the number of bills which are introduced and the various questions arising, it seems that unless the narrower construction be given to this rule and the exception to it be adopted as a true rule that it might be impossible for the House, on some future occasion, to consider legislation of the utmost importance.

For instance, suppose that the District appropriation bill should fail at this session because of the difference now existing between the two Houses as to whether the appropriation for playgrounds should be paid from the federal and District revenues or merely from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and the two Houses, unable to reconcile their differences, the bill should fail; then another District appropriation bill should originate here, identically the same as heretofore, with the exception that the item for playgrounds should be omitted from the bill as proposed; would it then be suggested that because of this one change the bill was substantially the same, and that it would be impossible for the House to appropriate for the expenses of the District government? It seems to me that so long as the bill is not identical in words, in language, and in every respect, this point of order can not lie successfully against it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to this point of order briefly. Suppose we look to the reason of the rule under discussion. It is a rule which obtains in most of the state legislatures, and is intended to prevent the time of parliamentary bodies from being wasted, and to save the members from the necessity of thrashing over matters that have been adequately considered, and rejected. Hence the necessity for using the words "in substance" in the rule. As I understand the particular proposition that is before this House, the present bill is substantially the same as the one heretofore rejected, save that the money items are different. What was, and is, the main principle involved in this bill? It is that the United States Government shall enter upon the purchase of embassy sites abroad. That was the great controlling principle over which the contest was waged a few days since. The question of expenditure in that connection is a matter of detail. The discussion of a few days ago was waged over the principle and not over the mere details of expenditure. That principle has been decided, by the adverse vote of this House, and now the same principle is before us, with a change in the items of expenditure that will be involved. Therefore, I submit that this bill is, in substance, the same bill which we have heretofore rejected. The substantial matter which the House has had in mind at all times in connection with this bill, is whether we shall purchase embassy sites at all, not what the cost of those embassy sites shall be. It seems to me, in conformity with precedent, and in conformity with principle, that that interpretation should be given to the rule, which would sustain the point of order, and cause this bill to be dismissed from further consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, as the history of the discussion has been gone into, if the Speaker will permit me and the House will not be too impatient, I will refer briefly to that discussion. Here was a measure to enter upon a new policy. I think I stated in the discussion that for more than one hundred and twenty years the policy of this Government has been along certain lines. I stated that the President of the United States had not asked to change this policy. I stated that the Secretary of State had not asked by any communication to change that policy.

Mr. DENBY. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption at that point?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. DENBY. Every Secretary of State from the time of Secretary Olney, in 1897, has advocated this measure. Secretary Olney—and I am replying directly to the statement made by the gentleman—in a communication to the Senate transmitted to the Congress estimates which had been called for by the department of the cost to erect buildings in 14 foreign capitals, and he thereupon recommended the beginning of this policy as long ago as 1897; and from that day to this there has been absolutely no change in the advocacy of this policy by the succeeding Secretaries of State down to Secretary Root and the present Secretary, Mr. Knox.

Mr. PRINCE. Very well. I stated then, and I restate now, that there was not a syllable, or a word, or a line of public hearings that showed that these officers, who represented a part of this Government, would come up, as I used the expression, "to the captain's office" and ask for this appropriation. I make the charge again. This is all an afterthought. This is all a second wind, as you might express it. There is not a word of it in any report to this House, not a syllable on the part of any executive officer asking for this policy. I stated it then and I state it now. I have before me your second report on this bill—that is, substantially the same bill—and there is not on this bill, that is substantially the same bill, and there is not a word in that report, not a letter from any Secretary of State, asking for the doing of it.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PRINCE. Now, I have answered all I will.

Mr. DENBY. I was merely going to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] that I have not the slightest objection to his talking to the merits of this bill, but I wish to remind him that he is not talking to the point of order which he has raised. If the rest of us are allowed as great freedom of debate, I should be very happy, as far as I am concerned, to see that the gentleman continues in his present line. I make the point of order that he is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. PRINCE. I stated frankly to the Chair and to the House and asked, in effect, unanimous consent. I said my colleagues from Illinois had gone out and given reasons for the action of the House. I submit to my colleagues in this House, when I made the point of order, I stood by the point of order in my argument. You have dragged it out upon the other side. I said not a word. I believe in standing by a legal proposition. To bring in new matter, you have sought to meet my argument upon the basis of the cost of the building. So did a distinguished gentleman on the other side, and I sat here in silence listening to you. I knew I should have an opportunity to answer it. I say to you now that I stood on that action; that you were entering upon another policy; it was because of the policy which is the substance of this bill that that bill was voted down on the 2d day of March.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Does not the gentleman know, when he states that this is a new policy being entered upon, that as early as 1820, as early as 1832, both of them under a Democratic administration, and then again in 1886, under the Cleveland administration, appropriations were made by this House without any objection?

Mr. PRINCE. Did you buy any buildings?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Does not the gentleman further know, when he states there have been no reports made to Congress, that figures were given in 1907 by the then Secretary of State giving a detailed statement to this House of the cost that might be expended by the Government to provide embassies in these foreign countries?

Mr. PRINCE. That may all be; but I am talking about this bill. I again assert that there is not a syllable from any representative of one of the coordinate branches of this Government whose duty it is, under the law, to make estimates to this House. There is not an estimate given of what you ask for. It is like other measures pending, seeking to do what this administration has not asked to be done, as far as the estimates are concerned.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not a fact that when this bill was under discussion a week ago the gentleman from Illinois based his chief argument against it upon the allegation that under the bill it would be possible and probable that the cost of the embassy would be at least $500,000?

Mr. PRINCE. That was one ground, but another was the furnishing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not a fact that in at least six places during his remarks the gentleman gave as the chief argument, and moved the House by consideration of the fact, that there was no limit on the cost; and in six places he repeated the charge that the embassies would cost $500,000 apiece?

Mr. PRINCE. I feel flattered that my colleague has felt sufficient interest to number the times. If I said it, I do not take one word of that argument back.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If that was the gentleman's argument in this House at that time, and this bill is offered free from that objection, I will ask him whether it is not a totally different bill?

Mr. PRINCE. It is not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can cite the gentleman to the places in which he repeatedly made the statements I have referred to.

Mr. PRINCE. I have no doubt of that. I presume the gentleman has counted correctly, and I do not question that; but I spoke to the policy as well. I spoke of the furnishing as well. When you start this Government of ours to building and furnishing and equipping embassies, we will entertain as royally in embassies as any other government. You are starting out exactly the same way as they did with the navy, that we must have the greatest Dreadnoughts afloat. Why, if you are going to enter upon that policy, if you are going to erect these buildings, furnish and equip them, you should maintain a building and entertain equal to the King of England, the Czar of Russia, or the Emperor of Germany, so that you should come to Congress and ask that the Government should be put in the front rank. I am against the policy which you are seeking to enter upon; for that is what it means; it means that and nothing else.

Mr. JAMES. Can the gentleman tell the House how many departments of the Government here in this city are occupying rented houses now?

Mr. PRINCE. Well, I do not know.

Mr. JAMES. How many departments of the Government now occupy rented houses?

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, yes. I understand that we are paying a million and a half or two millions of dollars for rent of buildings here in Washington.

Mr. JAMES. The Department of Justice and the Department of Commerce and Labor both occupy rented buildings. What I desired to direct the gentleman's attention to is that before going abroad to spend our money we at least should own our own buildings at home and not be paying great rents.

Mr. PRINCE. I quite agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, as honors seem to be about even in wandering away from the point of order——

Mr. PRINCE. I think so, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad if the gentleman would proceed in order.

Mr. PRINCE. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. McCALL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, if it is in order.

Mr. McCALL. With reference to the point of order.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. Does the gentleman have any precedents where the consideration of a bill has ever been refused in the House, according to that precedent in the British Parliament? Has there ever been a case where it has been done?

Mr. PRINCE. I have sought to ascertain with reference to this question, and so far as I can learn this particular point directly has not been presented to Congress in its history.

Mr. McCALL. Then I should like to ask another question, Whether this would not be, in effect, a limitation upon the power of the committee; whether the rules of this House do not expressly and without limitation confer upon any committee which has the right of call, the power to call up for consideration any bill reported by it at a previous time?

Mr. PRINCE. I will answer that.

Mr. McCALL. And would that provision of Jefferson's Manual be relevant upon bills called up by committees?

Mr. PRINCE. I intended to answer that and will do so. My answer is that any bill in order under the rules of the House of Representatives may be called up. Now, what are the rules of the House? On page 472, Rule XLIV is as follows:

> The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable, and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House and joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Suppose that the House should vote down a sundry civil appropriation bill. Does the gentleman think it would be impossible to bring in another sundry civil appropriation bill, even though some of its provisions might be changed, or would we have to go without an appropriation for that year?

Mr. PRINCE. I am frank to say to the gentleman that if you should change the bill, if it was changed in substance, I think it would not be obnoxious to this rule.

Mr. OLMSTED. But it would still be substantially a sundry civil appropriation bill just the same.

Mr. PRINCE. There is no such question presented here. The question presented by the gentleman is one of the last magnitude, namely, either to starve the Government, or give it something to live upon. The rule has never been so strictly observed as to stop indispensable proceedings altogether. Will the gentleman insist that this is an indispensable bill, that the Government can not live unless it has an embassy abroad?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In reference to appropriation bills, the illustration was made of the provision for playgrounds on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Suppose the two Houses did not get together on that item. The bill would die. The point is made that therefore another bill could not be introduced. What I want to ask the gentleman is this: Is it not true that on that appropriation bill, as on the other bills, there is an agreement of both Houses on nearly the entire bill, so that the elimination of one item would not destroy the bill?

Mr. PRINCE. It would not affect the bill at all.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That was the action by the House in rejecting only one item.

Mr. PRINCE. That was the answer I was going to make to that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman desire to have remain on the record the statement that this is an effort by the side-door route to accomplish something that this administration does not desire?

Mr. PRINCE. I say, that so far as I know this administration, speaking through its Secretary of State, has presented no communication, so far as the papers before this committee disclose, which warrants me in taking the position that the administration is in favor of the measure.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is a mere inference on the gentleman's part.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman state that he is favorable to it?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. My question was whether the gentleman wished to have remain in the RECORD the positive declaration that this was an attempt by a side-door route to accomplish what this administration did not desire?

Mr. PRINCE. No; I will acquit the administration, because I do not think it has made any expression in regard to it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, the gentleman has failed evidently to read a recent speech made by the President of the United States in which he most heartily advocated the proposition that this Government should buy and own its legations and embassies.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; and the President said that any opposition to the proposition is demagogy. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRINCE. That is all right; if it is demagogy to stand for what a man believes is right, I am willing to go to my constituents and stand by what I say. They have sent me here for a number of years, and I still propose to stand by what I believe is right.

But let us go further. "A bill once rejected, another of the same substance"—and I insist that this is the same substance—"can not be considered at the same session."

What has been done? Page 2647 of the RECORD of March 2 shows that Mr. MACON moved to amend by striking out the enacting clause of the bill. There was a straight issue upon the bill and its merits, a motion made to strike out the enacting clause. It was stricken out by a yea-and-nay vote. Then a motion was made to reconsider and lay that motion on the table, and that was carried. Now, if there ever is a time when Congress, acting in the House, not in the committee—these gentlemen are talking about committee amendments as if there was a committee motion—but here was a deliberate act of the House itself striking out the enacting clause by an aye-and-nay vote, putting the motion on the table and moving to reconsider and laying that on the table. Is that a finality? If it is, let it be so. If it is not, then why trifle with the House by bringing in the next day another measure? Oh, but you say, they could not bring it in very often. They have done it; it is here. The public time is being consumed when the House has finally spoken.

Now, is the House itself going to put upon the book a precedent that when a committee, or a segment of the House, feels aggrieved at the action of the House they can bring in another bill and modify it only to the extent of a few dollars? Can they take up the public time in that way? We ought to pass public legislation. There is demand for it all over the United States, and now we are to take the time in voting one day for this, and one day for that, upon the same measure, and not by a motion to reconsider. I say that if the House adopts such an action it is a bad precedent. This question has now arisen above the question of an embassy; it has arisen to the high dignity of the privileges of the House. The question is whether the House shall stand by what it has done. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has listened with attention and with much interest to the presentation of this point of order and to its discussion. Touching Jefferson's Manual, the Chair does not agree with the criticism made by a committee of the House, if the Chair recollects, in 1880, that it is substantially antiquated and of but little authority. The observation of the Chair is that Jefferson's Manual is in constant use by the House and is adopted by one of the rules of the House. The Chair is satisfied that the clause of Jefferson's Manual which is cited here, as a general proposition, lays down a very salutary and useful principle:

A bill once rejected, another of the same substance can not be brought in again at the same session.

Now, the object of the rule in the Manual, touching this as a matter of practice, was that there should be a finality when the House had once considered a proposition, that a similar proposition, in substance the same, should not be in order during the same session; and yet there comes the question of fact as to whether it is in substance the same.

Jefferson's Manual, in dealing with the subject of inconsistent amendments, lays down the general principle that were the Chair permitted to draw questions of consistence within the vortex of order he might usurp a negative on important modifications and suppress, instead of subserving, the legislative will.

Jefferson's Manual, as it is modified by the rules of the House—and they have all to be construed together and in the light of precedents that are made and the practice of the House under other rules—may apparently from time to time lead to conflicting decisions. In two instances it seems to be required that the Chair shall enter into the question of substance or consistency. Take the rule of the House that prohibits legislation on a general appropriation bill—a salutary rule in the opinion of the Chair and in the opinion of the House, because it has rested in the rules of the House for more than a generation.

Now, who shall determine in that case under that rule as to whether an amendment or a proposition contains legislation? In the practice, which seems necessary under the rule, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole decides, overruling or sustaining the point of order as the case may be, always, of course, subject to appeal and approval or reversal. In practice, therefore, the Chair constantly in Committee of the Whole determines whether the proposition is legislation such as is prohibited by the rules. Again, one of the rules of the House provides that in a certain case a Senate bill "substantially the same" as a House bill may be substituted for the House bill. The Chair in such case practically determines whether the Senate bill is substantially the same, for under the conditions of such bills it would practically be impossible for the House to determine the question. Therefore there are these two exceptions to the principle that the Chair should not decide questions as to substance or consistency.

It has been held that if an amendment proposed to a bill under consideration be changed one word, it will be a different proposition, although it may be substantially the same. The Chair recollects that this is the practice which is uniform, so far as amendments are concerned, both in Committee of the Whole and in the House.

The Chair cites the rule touching amendments proposing legislation on appropriation bills, the practice of the House touching similar but not identical amendments, and the substitution from the Speaker's table of a Senate bill "substantially the same" as the House bill, in order to show that under this code of rules and the practice of the House no hard-and-fast rule can be observed by the Speaker, although the general principle that he should not decide questions as to substance and consistency is undoubtedly sound.

Now, while the Chair is in full harmony with the provision cited from Jefferson's Manual, forbidding the bringing in again of a bill the same in substance as one already decided adversely during the session, yet the Chair is not unmindful of the decision made by Mr. Speaker Banks in 1856, touching the army appropriation bill. In that case there was a "rider" put upon the bill touching the use of money appropriated in that bill in enforcing the so-called (as the Chair recollects) Le Compton constitution of Kansas. The bill failed through disagreement of the House and Senate. A new bill was proposed with the "rider" omitted, and Mr. Speaker Banks ruled that the provision in Jefferson's Manual did not apply to the new bill. It is not for the Chair to criticise that ruling, because there was no appeal from the same. But the Chair is quite aware that touching appropriation bills and bills of general importance, if a bill should fail because of a certain single provision which might cause disagreement between the Houses, and if it should be necessary to introduce a new bill without the provision to which there had been disagreement, and if it should be a close question as to whether the new bill was substantially the same as the old bill, the Chair, if he were to assume decision of the question as to substance, might, in effect, put himself in the position of negativing the consideration of the bill or deciding affirmatively in favor of its consideration. So that under this condition, the Chair, after having examined the various precedents and the practice of the House differing upon various methods of procedure under the rules, recognizing the importance of there being finality where the House has once acted, but recognizing also the importance of not making a decision that if acquiesced in may bind the hands of the House in matters of very great importance, the Chair believes it is better to submit this question of order to the House, as to whether this bill is substantially the same as the bill which was rejected a week ago to-day.

The question might perhaps be raised on a question of consideration, as to whether the House will consider this bill, in view of the point of order or in any other way which to the House seems proper.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois raises the question of consideration.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to raise the question of consideration, the bill being on the calendar, and it being calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. Oh, undoubtedly, it being in connection with the point of order. The Chair might raise it.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand, the Chair is not submitting the point of order, but the gentleman from Illinois is raising the question of consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair perhaps may have been in error. It can be raised in any other way; but the point of order being made, the Chair rather invited a test as to whether the point of order was well taken by suggesting a question of consideration.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If on a question of consideration the House declines to consider the bill, does not that leave it upon the calendar, and then we would not be deciding the point of order at all?

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the Chair that the point of order having been raised, one of three things has to happen—the point of order must be withdrawn, the Chair must decide the point, or the Chair must submit the point to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will just as easily test it that way as the other.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair proposes to submit this proposition to the House, I desire to say just one word in reference to it. The House undoubtedly——

The SPEAKER. Without admitting that the proposition is open to debate, without objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Chair has no objection, I would like to say a word. As far as I am personally concerned, I am opposed to this bill; but with the issue involved in this bill I would dislike very much to see the House make a ruling that I believe might rise up to haunt us in the future. The tendency of the times is to liberality in the House, itself deciding the questions coming before the House. Now, on any question coming before the House, the question of consideration can be raised either by refusing to vote to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill or by directly raising the question of consideration of a bill on the House Calendar, so it is always in the power of the House at any time to refuse to consider a bill, just as the House can now refuse to consider this bill before it is discussed by refusing to go into the Committee of the Whole House, and the bill goes back on the calendar and out of the way, and I think it would be a very unwise precedent to put it in the power of the Chair to rule, because a bill is somewhat similar to a bill that has been considered that the House can no longer consider the bill. I think it would be unwise for this House to say that this bill can not be considered now if a majority of the House are in favor of its consideration. I think the wise course to pursue if we want to consider this bill—and I do not want to consider it—is to vote down the proposition when the gentleman moves to consider it in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair the point of order being made to this bill by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

PRINCE] that the proper question to submit to the House is: Shall the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois be sustained?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 143, noes 100.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 134, answered "present" 10, not voting 94, as follows:

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRINCE. Will it be proper to make a motion to reconsider and lay that motion on the table? I am half inclined to think the action of the House is the highest action; but when they are gigging back, I do not know.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the motion to reconsider is not necessary or would not be proper in this case.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, for safety, because some might change their votes and then move to reconsider, I make the motion.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be inclined to sustain the point of order. In other words, a point of order is made against the motion to reconsider, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A parliamentary inquiry. What has happened to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that, the point of order being sustained, it is stricken from the calendar.

LOAN OF TENTS.

The Clerk will call the next committee.

When the Committee on Military Affairs was called,

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate joint resolution No. 63.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a Senate joint resolution, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 63, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the confederate veterans' reunion to be held at Mobile, Ala., in April, 1910.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution 63.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee confederate veterans' reunion, to be held at Mobile, Ala., April 26, 27, and 28, 1910, such tents, with necessary poles, ridges, and pins, as may be required at said reunion: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the date of said reunion as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and Jacob D. Bloch, general chairman of said executive committee: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from Jacob D. Bloch a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will.

Mr. MANN. This provides for the loan of certain tents for the use of the confederate veterans' reunion to be held April 26, 27, and 28, which, of course, is not very far distant, but it all would depend upon the question of whether Jacob D. Bloch should be living. If, in the inscrutible ways of Providence, Jacob D. Bloch should not be able to furnish a bond, this resolution would be valueless. Why would it not be proper, if it will not delay the matter, to strike out, from line 5, page 2, the words "Jacob D. Bloch," so it would read, "before delivering such property take a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property?" I care nothing about it, however.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not care anything about it, but it passed the Senate that way, and the House resolution had the same. The confederate veterans put that name in and the Senate has passed it. Of course I should imagine if he were dead, the Secretary of War would have discretion to take bond from some other party.

Mr. MANN. If Jacob D. Bloch were not living this would not be worth the paper it was written on.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I shall not move to amend, but I shall not object to an amendment if anyone offers it.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to interfere with it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is just as they sent it over, and they are very anxious to get it passed. It is a courtesy that is extended to almost all the societies of the United States under the same terms that are provided in this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that House joint resolution 114 on the same subject be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection House joint resolution 114 will be laid on the table. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14464) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 13899. An act granting unto the Hot Springs Street Railway Company, its successor and assigns, the right to maintain and operate its electric railway along the southern border of that portion of the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, known as the Whittington Lake Reserve Park.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4626. An act for the widening of Sixteenth street NW. at Piney Branch, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 6449. An act permitting the Wisconsin Central Railway Company to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota; and

S. 5125. An act authorizing the creation of an additional land district in the State of Oregon, to be known as the "Vale land district."

ROAD FROM HARRISONVILLE TO FORT MOTT, N. J.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I now call up, on the Union Calendar, the bill H. R. 1014.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1014) providing for the repair and rebuilding of the road from Harrisonville, N. J., to the post of Fort Mott, N. J., and the national cemetery at Finns Point, N. J.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill for amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of repairing and rebuilding the road leading from Harrisonville, N. J., to the post of Fort Mott, N. J., and the national cemetery at Finns Point, N. J.; said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the pro forma amendment to strike out the last word.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; just for information I wish to ask the gentleman from New Jersey whether the sum of $10,000 appropriated in this bill will build and finish this road; or whether next year or the year after the Congress will have to make another appropriation?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, in the opinion of the department it will build it, and there will be no more money needed for the repairs of the road for a number of years. I presume, of course, as the years roll on there may be some slight repairs needed.

Mr. SULZER. Will the Government have to attend to the repairs?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I presume it would be the Government, as it is solely for the benefit of the Government that the road is to be built there. My recollection is that the road is about 4½ miles long.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the House that this is one bill providing for building a road that the department has been urging for some years, for the reason that the only one using it is the United States Government. All the supplies for Fort Mott are hauled from the station to this post. Fort Mott is a coast-defense fortification post. It is on the water, and, as I understand from the authorities, there is no line of steamers carrying supplies to the point, and the War Department, therefore, say that it costs the Government more in animals and in time and in annoyance to get over that road than it would cost if the Government had it in repair; and it is used only by the Government, and by nobody else. The people do not need it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Is there a road in existence at that place now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Who built that road?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, who can answer the question.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. In reply, I will just state that it is what is termed a "public road," laid out by the authorities, where the municipality, called a "township," is charged with the repairs and maintenance. The road running from Salem, the county seat, up Penns Neck to Pennsville, is what is called a "shell road," which is a very good road, which may be known to Members who have ever driven over it. Along that road are most of the properties upon which taxes are levied. That road is used by the residents of the township. This road, running from that main road down to the fort, has practically no taxable property of any value or any farms, and hence the people in that locality have no use for the road, and have no desire to tax themselves to repair that road solely for the benefit of the United States Government in conveying to the fort its ammunition and supplies for the soldiers there. The department, has demonstrated what this road, in a measure, has cost them, by having bids made for the supplies to the fort deliverable at the fort and deliverable at Salem. The difference in the price is very material. You can very readily understand, as a portion of this road goes through lowland, that as the years go on without any improvements it will practically become impassable, and it is for the sake of the Government, and not for any private people, that this road should be improved. My constituents care nothing about it themselves. It has been urged by the department upon me and upon the committee, and, as I understand, it is the only one on which the committee has made any such report from the department.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, without objection. The Chair understands the gentleman to move to strike out the last word.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I do. I see that this bill provides for building a road from Harrisonville, N. J., to Fort Mott and the national cemetery at Finns Point. Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this will answer both purposes? In other words, is the national cemetery on the road between these points?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That I could not answer. The whole argument was for a road to Fort Mott. I do not know exactly where the cemetery is; and so far as the cemetery is concerned, it entered very little, if at all, into the minds of the committee in reporting the bill.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, Finns Point National Cemetery is on the reservation, at a distance from the reservation entrance of 3,337½ feet.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The controlling idea in my mind, and, I think, in the minds of the majority of the committee, was the road to Fort Mott, where all the supplies for the troops must be hauled.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee as to the class or grade of that national cemetery, if he knows—how many interments there are there?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I could not answer that, because it had no bearing on the report, in my mind, and I made no investigation on that line.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. One other question: Is Fort Mott on any national reservation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. The land is owned by the United States?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Owned by the Government.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. And is this road entirely within the reservation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; it is not at all within the reservation until it strikes the grounds surrounding the fort.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Is it the policy of your committee to build roads outside of reservations?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It has not been, nor is it the policy of Congress, although Congress had done it in some cases in the past. As I said before, the only reason for departing from that policy in this case was because the authorities claimed to us that it cost the Government more to haul the freight; that, in addition to the annoyance, it used up their animals and their vehicles and delayed their transportation; and that it would be cheaper to build the road for the use of the Government than it was to continue under the present system.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. How many troops are stationed there?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Three artillery companies, I think.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I think the report states that there are two.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think there are three. That is my recollection. One company could have been added since the reports from the department were made.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I should like to know why it is necessary to maintain a fort at a point as inaccessible as this one, where they can not get in their supplies.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The question of establishing the fort comes under the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications. They are all men of great eminence in their profession of arms, and they have surveyed the entire Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and have located the coast defenses at certain points. They could answer better than I.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This is on the Delaware River.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is on a river, just the same as Fort Washington is on the Potomac River. The question whether it is a good place for it or not is not before Congress, because we have placed the absolute power in this Board of Ordnance and Fortifications to locate the defenses wherever they deem best. As I understand, this is on a river, so located as to protect the city of Philadelphia, just as Fort Washington on the Potomac is a coast defense, because it is so located as to protect the city of Washington from assault by water.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. It is undoubtedly a navigable river.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Undoubtedly a navigable river.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. They could get their supplies by water much cheaper than by land.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no. If the Government had to run its own boat there and carry its own supplies, it would cost more than it does to drag them through the mud.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Then it is at a point where boats do not usually land.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know that they can land there at all. You must remember that when you locate a fortification it is not necessary that it shall be at a point where boats can land. These great coast-defense guns have a range of 12 or 14 miles, and a fortification may be utterly inaccessible by boat and yet splendidly placed to defend the city of Philadelphia or the city of Washington, or any other city further up the river. It is not necessary at all that a coast-defense fortification shall be at an accessible point, where boats can go right up to the fort.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. The only goods, then, that these two companies which are stationed there have to transport over this road of 4 miles is their provisions.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; their whole equipment, their ordnance, ammunition, everything connected with the post. It is not only their food, but their garrison equipage, their ammunition and guns.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it is a pretty bad piece of road that a soldier can not transport enough provisions over during the twelve months to support him?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and if it were only provisions there would be no necessity for the road.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. What else?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They use for target practice an immense amount of ammunition; they carry the guns over there for emplacement; they have all the paraphernalia of a post.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. They have their own teams that are idle a great deal of the time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have their teams there for regular work, and the department claims that it costs more to replace the horses, and so forth, that are worn out than it would to build the road.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I notice that the department, not the department, but an officer, makes that statement.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is the department, because it was sent to the War Department and they transmitted it to us. If the gentleman will look over the reports from the department he will see that it is very rare for the head of a department to write anything to us, but he transmits the report of the officer in charge, and by that means indorses the report.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I want to say to the chairman that I am not asking these questions to delay or to oppose the bill. I am in favor of more and better roads, and I am asking the questions for information for myself and the House as to the policy of the committee in building these roads. I am interested in knowing why there should be 4 miles of road built here at this particular point when we are not able to build them at a great many places where I believe they should be built. If it is a change of policy on the part of the committee, I want to say that I am in favor of it. I am in favor of a more liberal appropriation for roads to national cemeteries and for military roads. If Congress is not ready to enter upon a more general policy I am opposed to these little special roads.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. So far as I am concerned, I have no hesitation in saying, with regard to roads to national cemeteries, that it is an entirely distinct and different proposition to a road that the Government needs for its own purposes. In other words, the Government would rarely need a road to a national cemetery, and certainly the great body of those in the national cemetery would never want to use the road. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. No; and I submit that they will never know what sort of a tombstone or monument is placed over them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say frankly that I would oppose any proposition to build roads simply for the convenience and luxury or pleasure of citizens along the line of the road. I would not have favored this road for the people of New Jersey to a national cemetery, and I only favor it because I believe it is a matter of economy for the Government to have the road constructed.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. The chairman, I think, will agree with me that we have spent several hundred thousand dollars building roads to national cemeteries, and that there are several other national cemeteries that have been located by the action of Congress in inaccessible places, just like Fort Mott has been located, where there should be roads built to them, and an expenditure for the improvement of the national cemetery or park is useless when it is so inaccessible. In my opinion, the House ought to enter upon a more liberal policy along these lines.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Does the bill provide that the Government shall obtain the consent of the State or municipality?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no provision in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the gentleman think there should be a provision of that kind?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should be glad to have the State take control as soon as it is built, and keep it up. It is a public highway.

Mr. MANN. I want to say that this is not a direction to construct this road at all; it is only an appropriation to the Secretary of War which he may use for the construction of the road. The report shows that there have already been negotiations between the officials at the fort and the local officials for obtaining permission to construct the road. I do not suppose the Secretary of War will expend any of the amount appropriated in the bill until he obtains authority.

Mr. GARRETT. I think it ought to be in the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no objection to an amendment to that effect.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question in this connection if I may be permitted. So far as I have been able to see from reading this bill and the report, it is a good bill. This road is for the benefit of the United States Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Only.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The national cemetery is on the reservation, according to the report, 3,337 feet from the entrance to the reservation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The road is entirely for the post.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the committee, in considering in a general way this question of roads to national cemeteries, will not make their policy too narrow.

The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs understands that throughout the country there are a great many roads to national cemeteries, and perhaps he may be aware of the fact that I have a road to a national cemetery at my own home town, Newbern, N. C., constructed some twenty years ago and built by the Government at an expense of $20,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How long is the road?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. About 2 or 3 miles long. That road has had some repairs since. I secured the passage of a bill through Congress since I have been in Congress appropriating about $6,000 for repairs, but the road is now again in bad condition. It is owned by the Government, a large part of it; and it seems to me in the case of the road to the national cemetery at my town and to national cemeteries in other towns in the country that when the Government has expended so much money on these roads the policy of the committee should be broad enough in a proper case to appropriate money for the purpose of repairing these roads. I therefore wish to say that I hope the chairman of the committee will not outline too narrow a policy in such matters.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The chairman of the committee has no power to outline any policy.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Well, the committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The committee, of course, would have to pass upon each question when it is presented to it. Now, I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 10:

"Provided, That no work shall be begun on said road until the consent of the State of New Jersey is obtained."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the words "New Jersey" be stricken out of the amendment and that there be inserted in their place the words "the authorities of the municipalities in which the road is located," because the municipality has charge of the road.

Mr. GARRETT. I think I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the object is to acquire jurisdiction over the road entirely, it will have to be ceded by the State, in my judgment.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, before accepting the amendment, let me say to the gentleman from New Jersey that my recollection is that the only road work the Federal Government ever did, with the exception of these military roads, was the Cumberland road, beginning away back in 1802 and continuing to 1834, and it is my recollection that the statutes provided in regard to that road that the consent of the States, in every instance, should be obtained before the Federal Government should begin any work, and I apprehend that the same principle would apply to this road as did apply then—that is the principle that was recognized in the case of the Cumberland road.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But the Government owned that road and kept it up and used it as a post road. Now, if we have the jurisdiction ceded to the Government of the United States, and that Government should move the post away from there, the State of New Jersey might insist that we keep the road in repair, and I would not want anything of that kind.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think so at all. The Government would simply pass an act then ceding the road to the State, as was done with the Cumberland road.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I desire to say that in this case the roads are laid out by the municipalities, and the State itself has nothing to do with it, except where under the statute, by certain provisions, they are changed into state roads. This is not a state road.

Mr. GARRETT. I have no particular objection to the amendment; but this thought struck me, that it would be a little more in accord with the proper dignity of things for the Federal Government to deal with the States rather than with the local authorities. The very same principle that the gentleman has suggested is involved in the next bill on the calendar, a bill introduced by Mr. ANTHONY, of Kansas, and it is there provided that consent shall be had of the local authorities, and if the gentleman thinks that is better, I will not insist.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That I think will be sufficient.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Move your amendment.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move a modification by striking out the words "State of New Jersey" and insert "local municipal authorities."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "State of New Jersey" and insert "local municipal authorities."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] to call up a bill.

MILITARY HIGHWAY BETWEEN FORTS LEAVENWORTH AND RILEY, KANS.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 14547) and ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14547) providing for a military highway between Forts Leavenworth and Riley, Kans.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Chair under the rule declares the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14547, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14547) providing for a military highway between Forts Leavenworth and Riley, Kans.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, this bill confers authority on the War Department to permit the use of surplus prisoners in the two great federal penitentiaries at Leavenworth, Kans., in the work of constructing a military highway between Fort Leavenworth and Fort Riley, in the State of Kansas. These men are now employed in the work of building the new buildings in those institutions, but within a year or two it will be necessary for the Government to find some means of employing the labor of some of these men, and the department has recommended that these men be put to work in the construction of a military highway to connect these two largest military posts in the United States.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman what is the distance between these two posts?

Mr. ANTHONY. The distance between the two posts is 98 miles.

Mr. GARRETT. Are they connected now by railway?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are now connected by railway, but each year, Mr. Chairman, the Government moves large quantities of troops and materials between these two posts, and as there exists a military necessity for the construction of this road, as there exists another necessity, which is almost as great as the military necessity, and that is to find some occupation for the prisoners confined in these great institutions, some means which will not occupy their time and their labor in the production of articles which will come in conflict with free labor, I believe that this authority conferred upon the War Department, if put into practical effect, is one of the most legitimate uses to which this labor can be put; and I ask, Mr. Chairman, that this bill be passed which confers this authority upon the War Department to make this use of the labor if, in their wisdom, they deem it a proper thing to do.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. HINSHAW. How many prisoners are confined in these two prisons?

Mr. ANTHONY. In the military prison at which offenders who violate the military laws of the country are confined there are about from 1,200 to 1,500 at the present, and in the federal penitentiary, under the administration of the Department of Justice, there are about the same number.

Mr. HINSHAW. Are these prisoners or any of them engaged now in remunerative labor?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are engaged in no other labor than the construction of the buildings for their own penitentiaries.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is the business in which they are now engaged adequate to take up their time?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is at the present time, but in a year or two these buildings will be so nearly completed that there will be a large portion of this labor released. Then the Government will be up against the problem as to what occupation and labor they can put these men to work upon. If they go back to the production of shoes and harness and things of that kind, they will meet the objections of the labor unions of the country, who object to prisoners making articles of merchandise which come in competition with free labor. The old military prison was abolished for this reason alone, that they were unable to find occupation for those prisoners.

Mr. HINSHAW. I think great care ought to be exercised in not having these prisoners come in conflict with free labor. This bill provides only that their labor shall be used in the construction of this road. Is there any provision for materials or other expenses for constructing the road?

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say to the gentleman that the idea of this bill is that the Government only furnishes the labor of these prisoners.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it expected that the State of Kansas or the counties through which this road goes will furnish all material?

Mr. ANTHONY. Under the terms of this bill it is provided that the Government shall accept all free offers of material, and many of the townships have agreed to furnish the Government the free material needed for this road. It is a bill which is designed to cost the Government not a dollar other than the actual maintenance of these convicts.

Mr. MADISON. You stated a moment ago that you asked for the passage of this bill because the road was a military necessity, that there was a large number of troops and munitions of war moved between the two forts each year. Now, has this been done by wagon road?

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to qualify that statement, if I so made it. I would not state that the road was a military necessity, but of military value.

Mr. MADISON. Have these troops and these munitions been moved by wagon road?

Mr. ANTHONY. They have. It is the idea of the Government, whenever possible, to move troops overland in order to give them the proper marches that they would have in time of war. The Government prefers to transport them that way rather than to ship them by trains.

Mr. MADISON. What is the condition generally of the public roads as they now exist and as they have existed for some years between those two places?

Mr. ANTHONY. A very poor grade of ordinary dirt roads, for the most part.

Mr. MADISON. And not kept up very well?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are kept up in the usual manner of keeping up all roads in agricultural States in this country, which is a disgrace generally to the States that maintain them.

Mr. MADISON. It is a matter of difficulty, as a matter of fact, to make these movements?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are always hampered and rendered difficult on that account.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do not the Kansans claim that they have the best dirt roads in the world?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have never heard that claim in Kansas, and I will say that the best roads I have ever seen are in Pike County, Mo.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not turn this road around wrong end foremost and run it from Leavenworth down to Jefferson Barracks, on the Missouri River?

Mr. ANTHONY. On the completion of the road to Fort Riley I would be glad to support the proposition of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They have not got the road completed to Fort Riley yet?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand this road is a public highway under the control of the State of Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. The idea would be to use the present public roads.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes. Does the bill provide that the Federal Government shall have any control over the road?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not believe it does. It does not provide for any future control over the road.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that it strikes me that it is a very radical departure from established policy. If there is established a military road between these two forts, 98 miles apart, it is only a question of time when there will be military roads between all the other military reservations in the United States, and I do not believe the Government ought to go into the business of improving local highways under the pretext of establishing military roads.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will not admit the force of part of the gentleman's argument. I remind him that the situation which we have at Leavenworth exists in but one other place in the country, and that is Atlanta, Ga. The Government has its large penal institutions at Leavenworth, Kans., and at Atlanta, Ga., and the problem will be what to do with that class of prison labor. The construction of military highways by prison labor is one of the best solutions of the problem that has so far been offered.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is, perhaps, a wise policy in so far as it relates to the employment of federal prisoners; but, on the other hand, it opens up and adopts to a limited degree, at least, a policy on the part of the Federal Government to improve highways that are owned and under the control of the States.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not agree with the gentleman at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is what I am afraid of. That is the aspect, as an individual member, that makes me hesitate to support the bill. It seems to me that it is the first step toward entering upon a policy that would involve the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars out of the Public Treasury, to improve country roads on the ground of military necessity. I think the policy is one that is tremendously dangerous.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say that there can be but one other instance in the country, and that will be presented from Atlanta, Ga., at all similar to this.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will satisfy myself by saying no when the gentleman makes the usual motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, there has been but one objection I have heard urged to the employment of prisoners in the construction of a road. But it has been made by those probably not well informed or up to date on present methods in handling convicts in the work of building roads. It is true in times past we have had the horrors of convict camps and the difficulty in handling this class of labor. I want to read a letter which I have just received from the warden of one of the largest penitentiaries in the country, the Kansas State Penitentiary, showing their experience in work on the roads, showing that it is really a humanitarian system and life-giving to the convicts to have this kind of employment. This warden says:

WORKING PRISONERS ON HIGHWAYS.

KANSAS STATE PENITENTIARY,
Lansing, Kans., February 28, 1910.

Hon. D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR ANTHONY: This institution for a number of years has been working the surplus convict labor on the public highways, and we find no difficulty in so doing.

The men who so work in the building of roads during open weather are taken from the mines and other places where they are employed during the winter months. They enjoy the change and their improved health and contentment is marked. We do not use a gun guard with these men. An officer simply has charge of them, who is unarmed, and directs the men as he would that many laborers. The escapes from this body of men are less than from any other kind of work.

We get as much work per man from prisoners per day as we would if they were employed instead of compelled to work. We allow them to wear overalls, jackets, and broad-brimmed hats, and this privilege of getting out of prison clothes into citizen's clothes appeals to them. The fact that this privilege goes only to the men who are fit to be trusties makes the work upon the road a sort of a prize to be attained, and this helps discipline.

I am expecting this summer to work a good many of the men who are in the tuberculosis wards, with a view of bringing about an improvement in their health. They are men who are slightly affected with tuberculosis, and I believe a summer on the highway work will greatly benefit them, especially those who have been confined in the shops during the winter months.

If you desire any further information, will be pleased to furnish it.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Yours, very truly, J. K. CODDING, Warden.

If the same conditions in this prison should prevail in the other prisons, I want to say it would be a godsend to these prisoners instead of a cruelty to give them an opportunity to do work for the Government in the open air.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. One or two other questions, if you please. Suppose, now, that some of the counties or townships through which these highways are to be built should decline to contribute anything in the way of material. Would not the Government find it necessary to buy the material to construct the road through those counties and townships?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Government would be in nowise obligated to buy the road material.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would not be obligated; but would it not be a matter of policy for the Government to buy material, if it should enter upon the policy of constructing the highway as a military convenience, and not have to be dependent upon the counties through which the road runs? Some of the counties or townships might contribute the material, and others might refuse to contribute it. Would we go on and build the road through some of the counties?

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe the road would only be constructed through the townships agreeing to furnish the material. I do not understand that there will be any trouble about that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman can see what a powerful argument might be made in the future to build up the gaps in the road out of the Public Treasury where the townships failed to contribute the material.

Mr. ANTHONY. I call the gentleman's attention to section 8 of the bill, put in at the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE], which says:

That nothing herein contained shall confer upon any officer of the United States or any other person or persons any authority to incur any obligation upon the part of the United States for the acquirement of property, the purchase of material, or the maintenance of said highway.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true enough in the bill; but what I fear is that they will only partially build this road, or they will build it through some of the counties and not through other counties or townships, because the local authorities failed to contribute material. Congress will have to complete it by appropriations out of the Public Treasury. I know it is an unusual thing to undertake, and I fear the consequences of this kind of legislation.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] to the conditions that prevail over the route from Leavenworth to Fort Riley. I do not know of a township between those two forts that can not furnish the material for building a macadamized road. If there is a township anywhere along the line that has not the material in it, the material will easily be found in an adjacent township; and this convict labor will be used for moving it, taking it to where the road is built. It is not an expensive matter.

Mr. MANN. What is the character of the material?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Limestone. In all the counties east of the Kaw River the limestone is hard. In the counties west of the Kaw River for about 20 or 21 miles the limestone is soft, but they have always found it sufficient for macadamizing roads.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I suppose the gentleman bases his conclusion—and it is a very natural one—that it is greatly to the advantage of the localities to have the road constructed——

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I have no thought of that at all. The question is whether the prisoners can be kept employed or not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is one side of it. I am with the gentleman on that aspect of it.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. As a matter of course, every township will be glad to have a macadamized road built through it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the road shall be constructed, the Federal Government will have no control over it.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Certainly not. The jurisdiction will remain in the State.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But suppose the State or county should vacate a portion of the road.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. There is no probability of that, because there is a state law which makes every section line a public highway.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But that law might be modified or repealed.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes; and the world might come to an end. A great many things might happen in Kansas. A great many curious things have happened there, the same as in Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Sometimes we repeal very wise laws, and if we depend upon state legislatures for protection of federal rights, I fear that our dependence may be a little precarious, under some conditions.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. The chief difficulty with the gentleman seems to be due to the fact that these forts are not located in Indiana, so that the road might be built there.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We have one fort in Indiana—Fort Benjamin Harrison—and I was wondering if we could not have a military road built from Fort Benjamin Harrison down by way of Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, on through to Leavenworth and Fort Riley.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. When that proposition comes up, if the material is accessible, I will be in favor of the bill, if the work can be done by convict labor.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I simply wanted to get at the real facts in this case, so that we may use it as a precedent to string roads throughout the country here and there between forts and military reservations.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I have no objection to that if convict labor is used.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I understand this road is to connect two of the greatest military posts in the country?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Fort Leavenworth and Fort Riley?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The two are in the same State?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will there be any expense to the United States Government except the maintenance of the convicts?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is all the expense which is contemplated, and the expense is limited by the bill to that.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. And these convicts have to be maintained anyhow.

Mr. ANTHONY. They have to be maintained in these institutions. It will cost a little extra to maintain them on this road work.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the Federal Government have any supervision whatever over the road after it is constructed?

Mr. ANTHONY. None other than the general military use of the road.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The United States will have only the right which everybody else has to use the road.

Mr. ANTHONY. The idea in preparing the bill was not to encumber the Federal Government with any obligation to maintain the road after it is constructed, and I have no doubt whatever that the townships will attend to that work themselves.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I understand the Federal Government will have no control over this road when constructed; the control will be in the State and counties through which it passes.

Mr. ANTHONY. That it correct.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Do I understand that it will be used for the transportation of government supplies?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not entirely, but it will be largely used for the transportation of government supplies and the maneuvering of troops.

The following are indorsements and extracts from reports of War Department officials on this matter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 20, 1908.

MY DEAR ANTHONY: Referring to the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by yourself and in the Senate by Senator CURTIS, providing for a military highway between Forts Leavenworth and Riley, Kans., I take pleasure in forwarding herewith the views of the Quartermaster-General and the Chief of Staff, in which I concur.

I shall be pleased to favor this bill whenever called upon to do so.

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

Hon. D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

A true copy furnished Mr. ANTHONY for his information.

J. F. BELL,
Major-General, Chief of Staff.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
January 25, 1908.

A military road between Forts Riley and Leavenworth, Kans., would unquestionably be of great military value and convenience.

I cordially concur in the views of the Quartermaster-General, and recommend that anything be done which will aid and assist in this undertaking and is not contrary to the interests of the Government.

J. F. BELL,
Major-General, Chief of Staff.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, January 20, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

It would undoubtedly be desirable for military purposes to connect these two posts by such a road as is proposed, and if the labor of federal prisoners is available in this connection the cost of construction would be comparatively small. * * *

J. B. ALESHIRE,
Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I want to say before I sit down that upon general principles I am in favor of building good roads and using convict labor for that purpose, because in so using convict labor we do not bring it into competition with free labor. I advocated that principle when I was a member of the state legislature of North Carolina. This roadway, if the construction is no expense to the Government and it can be built by the use of convict labor, may be a good thing; but there should be no expense upon the Government.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to state the difference between the two forts, so that it may be fairly understood. Fort Riley is a cavalry and artillery post and Fort Leavenworth is an infantry and cavalry post. There are military schools for the drilling of the troops in field maneuvers at both places, and they are constantly marching troops from Fort Riley to Fort Leavenworth and from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Riley; they are constantly moving batteries and cavalry troops over the public highway.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman state how far these forts are apart?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. About 90 miles.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the construction of this military road is likely to pass jurisdiction over this highway to the Government, or whether the jurisdiction remains in the State?

Mr. ANTHONY. It will pass no jurisdiction to the Government. The idea is to let the jurisdiction remain in the State and the townships through which it passes. The bill provides that no work shall be done until the consent of the townships and county through which the road passes shall be obtained.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Section 3 refers to a permission being given for a right of way to the Secretary of War for the road, and in section 7 it is referred to as "a military road." Is not there danger, from the ambiguous way in which the bill is drawn, that it is giving over, as a part of the military equipment, this road to the Government?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think not; it is simply giving it a name or title so that it will be known as a military road.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the jurisdiction is to remain in the State, what is the need of giving a right of way to the Secretary of War?

Mr. ANTHONY. The cooperation of the townships——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is necessary that a highway of this sort should remain within the jurisdiction of a State and the municipality through which it passes.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the idea, to allow them complete jurisdiction.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I think the bill ought to be made certain in that respect, because the Government does not want to take over the responsibility for and the jurisdiction over this highway.

Mr. ANTHONY. In framing the bill the intention of the committee was to avoid that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It might lead to serious complication in case of accident if the bill was so drawn as to be construed that it could be contended that this was a government road, and that the Government was responsible for any accident.

Mr. MANN. The Government is not responsible.

Mr. MADISON. Does the gentleman contend that the Government could be sued?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No; the Government could not be sued, but whether it was a state road or a government road might hinder the keeping it in operation in the future.

Mr. ANTHONY. All title to the highway will remain in the State.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman if the Committee on Military Affairs has ever considered the policy of a general law upon this subject of working all the military convicts on the roads?

Mr. ANTHONY. This is the first time it has been brought up, to my knowledge.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If it is a good thing to provide for the employment of convicts on this road, why is it not a good policy to have all the federal convicts throughout the United States employed upon the United States public highways, and have a general law on that subject? I may say that I am heartily in favor of the bill and this principle, and I would like to see a general bill along that line.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman yield to me a few minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia five minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to pass, if for no other reason than one I want to mention.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask the Chair a parliamentary question. Are we in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and this is general debate.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, we have two federal prisons in the United States.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman had better wait until I get started. [Laughter.] We have one at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and one at Atlanta. I do not know the number of convicts at Fort Leavenworth, but we have 800 in Atlanta. We are building up an annex to the federal penitentiary, and when that is completed, which it soon will be, we will have 1,500 federal prisoners in a building with nothing comparatively to do. The organic act establishing these penitentiaries prohibited the convicts from coming in competition with free labor. It is minutely so stated in the original bill. They can not even have machinery of any kind inside the walls nor inside the building. Everything is hand work and must be hand work. Now, we have used our federal prisoners in Atlanta for building a wall 24 feet high around 20 acres of ground, including the building. We have about 75 or 100 men whom we have trained as stone cutters and stone setters, and they are putting up the annex. The remainder of those prisoners—800—we will have to put out to spading or forking up the ground, or doing something of the kind, to keep them healthy and alive. The State of Georgia has set this example. We have taken all the prisoners we have in the State and put them on the roads, except the old and decrepit, and they go on the farms for the purpose of raising corn and wheat and meat and things of that kind. It is inhuman to keep prisoners in close confinement in buildings.

The people of this country are demanding that the United States Government should set some example in the kinds of roads that we ought to have. The Department of Agriculture is moving along that line. This bill does not cost the Government anything; does not cost the United States Government a dollar. It does not cost the State of Kansas a dollar. The right of way is provided for along the contiguous ground, as well as the survey; not only that, but the stone and other material for building the roads is given free, and the only thing that makes any trouble about it at all in the minds, perhaps, of Members of the House was the suggestion of the gentleman on my left as to whether we were not infringing on states rights. I say "no." All the work is to be done by the engineers of the Department of Agriculture, and the road is to be built under their supervision and they are to construct it. It can not be done at all unless the townships or counties give their consent. In Georgia we have no general law for building public roads. That is a matter that is left to each county. This bill as applied in my county would be that nothing could be done until the commissioners of that county sanction the project. The State has no right at all involved. It has no control and it has a law authorizing county road commissioners, and those commissioners are absolute and have sovereign power to do as they please.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Does the gentleman not think it would be a wise provision to use the Atlanta prisoners to construct a military road from Atlanta to the sea?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have a bill asking for a 32-mile road, and as soon as this is out of the way I will put it in.

Mr. MANN. Why not build a road from Atlanta to Fort Leavenworth by way of New York?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no reason for it.

Mr. DAWSON. I want to inquire how much additional supervision these convicts will require outside of the penitentiary to that required inside.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Outside the penitentiary with this bill the department engineers construct the entire road.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Iowa is asking about guarding the convicts.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Oh, guarding the convicts.

Mr. DAWSON. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No more. They are to be guarded and they are to be sheltered and maintained out of the appropriation made in the sundry civil bill for those two institutions.

Mr. ADAMSON. It does not take any more guard?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It does not take any more to guard or a pound more to eat.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest this to the members of this committee. You must do something with the federal prisoners and the military prisoners. This covers the military prisoners in every section of the country. If you will go into the Appropriation Committee room you will see the deal of trouble that we have had in the last bill, which is ready to be reported, and it comes up as a distinct question, What are you going to do with your military prisoners? They are costing us now about 24 cents per capita per day, and they ought not to cost us more than 11 cents; and we are prepared with the hearings to show that. The prisoners in the Atlanta Penitentiary cost us 11 cents per capita to feed them. We paid 50 cents per capita before we built that prison. It is not only a question of economy, however, it is a question of humanity. What are you to do with the federal prisoners? You must work them somewhere. You can not work them in competition with free labor.

Now, there is not a man here who is interested in public highways, in my opinion, who has examined this bill but who must say that this is work at which they ought to be put; that this is what ought to be done. It costs nothing to the United States Government, it costs nothing to the State; the right of way and the material are given by the people who live along the survey. That is all there is in it. The Department of Agriculture is determined to inaugurate this policy——

Mr. GILLESPIE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Who is to furnish the wagons, scrapers, and equipment necessary to build this road?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow me to answer that, the prisons at Leavenworth have now ample road-making equipment.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Then why not put in the bill that the Government of the United States shall not be at any expense?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is in the bill. I have just made that statement.

Mr. MANN. There is quite a different provision in the bill; it says that the Department of Agriculture shall make all necessary surveys, and so forth.

Mr. GILLESPIE. That is my understanding, and I read the bill quite carefully.

Mr. ANTHONY. The bill provides absolutely that the Government shall be at no expense.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I will not yield. The suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois has been covered, I suppose. I want to explain it. The engineers now engaged in public-road building in the Department of Agriculture, with their road machines, are allowed by this bill to be put on this work. The wagons, mules, and horses necessary we have in Atlanta and we have them in Kansas.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The purpose is to have this road constructed without expense to the Government?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Largely for the benefit of the localities; now, why should the Department of Agriculture furnish the machinery in its possession for that purpose when it ought to be used elsewhere?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are not using it elsewhere.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman knows we make appropriations for it, and it is used elsewhere.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I say to the gentleman that it is not to be used elsewhere, and for that reason the bill provides that the machinery that the Department of Agriculture has shall be used. It is not a general proposition. Now, listen, it provides that these engineers are permitted to use the machinery the Department of Agriculture has which is not in use.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How far out from the prison do you propose to work these prisoners?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Ninety miles in Kansas.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How are you going to control them?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Control them? I will show you many prisoners in Georgia working on the roads, and you ask me how they are controlled?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How do you control them? That is what I want to find out.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It will take me ten or fifteen minutes to do it, but it is sufficient for me to say to you they are controlled.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who has control over these prisoners?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why, the guards in the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you think the same number of guards can guard these prisoners in the open that they can in the prison?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have answered that question once.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not hear you.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They will not have an additional guard, nor will an additional dollar be needed to guard these prisoners—not one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri as to who would guard these prisoners by saying that the Government has thousands of soldiers doing but little, and this would be a very good work to put them to; but we do not need guards. Under the modern and humane way of working the men, as testified to in a letter from the chief warden, he does not put an armed guard over a squad of prisoners. The idea is to use trusties, who will be glad of the opportunity to get in the open.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Might it not be better to muster these surplus soldiers out of the service and put them to work, too? [Applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is a gray horse of another color.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know it is.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is a mighty good proposition, if you can carry it out.

Mr. ANTHONY. If any gentleman wants time, I would be very glad to yield it to him. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, this measure is more important, it occurs to me, as a precedent than the bill is within itself. Something must be done not only with the federal prisoners, but with the state prisoners as well. It occurs to me that as a humanitarian measure in getting these prisoners out of their cells and outside of the walls of the prisons onto the public highway where they can have air and exercise, would be sufficient justification for the passage of this bill.

Out in the State of Ohio we have been legislating on this question for a number of years, and up to the present time no satisfactory solution has been given. At the present time many of the prisoners in the penitentiary at Columbus are engaged in the manufacture of material essential to the construction of roads, but they have never progressed so far as this bill seeks to go and placed them on the highways for the purpose of constructing roads themselves. But the question of competition between convict and free labor is rife throughout the entire country. Yesterday I received a letter from a man engaged in the manufacture of brooms in my district. They are manufacturing brooms with convicts in the state penitentiaries. I believe that they pay 60 cents a day for this convict labor, and these men and women in the city of Urbana, 30 miles removed from Columbus, are compelled to compete in the markets with men who are employed at 60 cents a day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COLE] has expired.

Mr. COLE. Mr Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE. Now, it occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that a measure of this kind which permits public employment of these men on the highways would be of infinite value, not only to the public in the construction of these roads, but also it would take them out of competition with free labor in the United States.

I do not think it is necessary to submit any argument to this committee on the proposition that men in this day can not successfully compete with 60-cents-a-day labor. As I say, this measure is but limited in its application, but if this works successfully, and if they construct this road in this manner successfully, why should it not establish a precedent whereby roads can be constructed throughout the country by taking labor that is now in competition with free labor and placing it where it can be of greater service to the public? I think, if for no other reason than establishing a splendid precedent, that this measure ought to be adopted and authority be given for the construction of this road with this convict labor. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I favor this bill, and for several very excellent reasons. Some disposition must be made in the near future of the idle labor in federal penitentiaries. I had for four years the indirect care and custody of federal prisoners as United States marshal for the eastern district of Tennessee. We were compelled to keep them in idleness in the various county jails, and confinement in idleness brought on complications, disease, and an unhealthy condition among the prisoners. In Knox County, where I reside, the county prisoners were employed upon turnpike construction; they were constantly in the open air, doing work that gave them needed exercise and insured good health conditions. As the Representative from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has so well said, there is a question of humanity involved in this proposition.

Secondly, after the present improvements on the federal prisons are finished, the more than 3,000 federal prisoners must either be kept in idleness or some avenue found for their employment.

I hope we will not follow the bad example of my State (Tennessee) by working prisoners in coal mines, workshops, and factories, where their labor comes in competition with free and honest labor and deserving manufacturers and coal operators are robbed of orders they need and deserve. I have now pending before a committee of this House a bill which I think ought to have the support of both sides of this Chamber.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Directly. That proposition or bill seeks to prohibit transportation companies from hauling convict-manufactured goods or convict-mined coal. The place to work state and federal prisoners is upon the construction of public highways, giving us a complete system of turnpike roads, and I hope that every Member of the House will favor the inauguration of this policy by voting for the pending bill, and thus make it impossible for federal prisoners to be used at some future day in workshops and factories located within federal prison walls.

President Taft, when Secretary of War, approved this proposed legislation, and in a letter to Representative ANTHONY used the following language:

> I shall be pleased to favor this bill whenever called upon to do so.

General Bell, Chief of Staff, and General Aleshire, Quartermaster-General, both cordially and strongly commended this measure.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman consider the labor employed in the construction of roads is not now free and honest labor?

Mr. AUSTIN. This road will not be constructed unless the pending bill becomes a law.

Mr. MADDEN. That is not the question. I wish to ask the gentleman if he considers the labor which is now employed all over the country in the construction of the roads which are being built by the different communities in the country as not being free, honest labor?

Mr. AUSTIN. I did not understand the gentleman's question at first. I do not mean to state that free and honest labor is not employed in the various States in the construction of public roads, although a number of the States are utilizing prison labor on road making. There is an immense field, as the gentleman knows, in every State in the Union, not only for the employment of every federal and state prisoner, but also for every available free and honest laborer in the construction of new and the extension of present pike roads.

The Republican party believes in protecting the American manufacturers and wage-earners against the cheap pauper-paid labor of the Old World, and it should in national and state lawmaking bodies at all times and under all circumstances favor free and honest labor and the men who have invested their capital in mines and plants against an unjust and unfair system which places prison labor and prison-made goods in the open market in competition with the output of our mills and factories.

I believe the United States is the only civilized country in the world that uses prison labor in workshops and factories in competition with free and honest labor. We should lose no time in putting an end to this great wrong and evil, and in this good and patriotic work both political parties should be solidly in line.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, this bill is for the purpose of building a road about 100 miles in length in the State of Kansas, largely, if not entirely, at the expense of the Government of the United States. The only ground which can be given for building this road would be that it was a military necessity to build this road between these two posts. So sure was the gentleman from Kansas when introducing the bill that that was the only ground on which the House would consent to build this road that he undertook to get from the War Department a statement that it was a military necessity. What does the department say? They would like to see a road of this sort built, but could not say that it was a military necessity.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAY. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that every indorsement that I asked of the War Department was given cheerfully and promptly; and if the gentleman will read the letter of Mr. Taft, when Secretary of War; the Chief of Staff, General Bell, and General Aleshire, of the Quartermaster-General's Department, he will see their indorsement.

Mr. HAY. I am going to read those statements.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the gentleman not to misrepresent me.

Mr. HAY. I am not misrepresenting the gentleman; I am saying that the War Department does not indorse this bill as a military necessity, and I will read what the gentleman has incorporated in his report.

Mr. ANTHONY. And "the gentleman" has not argued that the bill is a military necessity.

Mr. HAY. I decline to yield to the gentleman if he says that I am misrepresenting him. I read what the Quartermaster-General says. The Quartermaster-General says:

> It would undoubtedly be desirable for military purposes to connect these two posts by such a road as is proposed, and if the labor of federal prisoners is available in this connection the cost of construction would be comparatively small.

He says it would be "desirable," not that it is a military necessity. Now, the Chief of Staff, General Bell, says:

A military road between Forts Riley and Leavenworth, Kans., would unquestionably be of great military value and convenience.

Not a necessity; and no man can say it is a military necessity to build this road. Railroads connect these two posts, and all men and all supplies which are necessary to be transported from the one post to the other can be better transported over those railroads than they can over this proposed highway.

I say that this is a measure for building a road for the benefit of the State of Kansas. If we are going into that sort of business, if this Government is ready to go into the business of building roads, why we ought to have them do the same for the State of Virginia, for the State of Missouri, for the State of Colorado, for the State of Ohio, or for any other State as well as for the benefit of the State of Kansas. [Loud applause.] And, in line with that, I ask the Clerk to read, as a part of my remarks, the substitute which I propose to offer for this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed substitute for the information of the House in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to permit the use of any prisoners, not otherwise employed, serving sentences in the United States military prisons and in the United States penitentiaries, in the construction of any state highway that may be undertaken by the proper highway authorities of any State; said prisoners while so used to be subsisted, guarded, and sheltered at the expense of the States or of the counties through which said highways pass.

Mr. HAY. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas has stated that this will not cost the Government of the United States anything. There is a provision in this bill which provides that the United States shall not pay out anything for the construction of this road. Why, the bill expressly provides that the United States shall subsist, shall guard, and shall shelter the men who are building this road. It does not provide in this bill——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. ANTHONY. He will admit that this Government will have to subsist and will have to guard these men?

Mr. HAY. Yes; but not at the same expense as when they are at work on the road.

Mr. ANTHONY. It would be but very little more expense.

Mr. HAY. And, Mr. Chairman, as was suggested by a question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE], the bill does not provide a single, solitary equipment for the building of this road. Commit the Government to the building of this road, and you necessarily compel the Government to furnish every road machine and furnish every sort of equipment that may be necessary to build this road. I defy the gentleman from Kansas to show a single provision in this bill which provides that this equipment may be furnished either by the State or by the counties.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman I will refer to section 8 of the bill, which says that the Government shall not be liable for the purchase of any material.

Mr. HAY. I am talking about equipment, not material.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think "material" would cover it.

Mr. HAY. "Material" does not cover "equipment." Material for the building of a road means the rock and the dirt and whatever may enter into the building of the road.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is all provided for in the bill.

Mr. HAY. It is not provided for in the bill, and I should like to have you show me where it is. The gentleman from Georgia is anxious to have this bill passed because he has a bill of his own of a similar character.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes; I have, and do not you forget it, either. I do not cover up any of my tracks in the House.

Mr. HAY. Oh, no; the gentleman does not have to do anything of that sort. We all know that. We all understand the motives of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Anybody can find out at any time.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I call the gentleman's attention again to the eighth section:

SEC. 8. That nothing herein contained shall confer upon any officer of the United States or any other person or persons any authority to incur any obligation upon the part of the United States for the acquirement of property, the purchase of material, or the maintenance of said highway.

Mr. HAY. The "acquirement of property" does not cover the question of buying the machinery.

Mr. JAMES. That has reference to the right of way, the road itself?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows that that refers to the road itself and not to the equipment and machinery.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. It refers to everything in connection with the building of the road, and there is nothing in the bill that provides for the buying of any property by the United States.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman and I differ on that, that is all.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it will make it any more clear to the gentleman from Virginia, I will be glad to have the bill amended by putting in the words "machinery and equipment," also.

Mr. HAY. I was simply answering the statement of the gentleman from Kansas that this would not cost the Government of the United States anything. Anybody who knows anything about the mode in which governments undertake projects of that sort knows that if the Government of the United States once commits itself to the building of this road it will have to build it at whatever cost may be necessary in order to complete it. Next year we will have an estimate from the War Department asking for an appropriation for the purpose of continuing the construction of this work.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the gentleman, does he favor national aid to public roads?

Mr. HAY. I do; and I favor national aid for public roads in every State in this Union, and not alone in the States of Kansas and Georgia. [Applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How can you get it in Missouri and Virginia if you do not start somewhere?

Mr. HAY. Will you vote for the substitute which I have offered to this bill?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No. I will vote for another one, though. There is no responsibility on anybody anywhere in your substitute.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman thinks he does, but I do not think so.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is there anything in this bill which would prevent the Federal Government from undertaking to exercise control over the road after it was built? What is the gentleman's opinion about that?

Mr. HAY. There is nothing in the bill which would prevent the Government from taking control of the road.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is my construction of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Inasmuch as the road which the gentleman from Kansas wishes is right in the neighborhood of his penitentiary, and inasmuch as the one the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] wants is right adjacent to the penitentiary, is it not reasonable to conclude that they will both be likely to get their roads first if your substitute passes?

Mr. HAY. Oh, well; it is reasonable to conclude that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], through whose district I understand part of this Georgia road runs, would try to do that.

Mr. ADAMSON. As those roads are nearer the prisons where the convicts are, is not that likely?

Mr. HAY. I do not know about that. I suppose probably they would not.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he considers it either practicable or sensible to transport prisoners from Kansas to Virginia?

Mr. HAY. Of course it is practicable. They are transporting them all over the State of Virginia for the purpose of working on public roads, and they can be transported from Kansas to Virginia for that purpose just as well.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that these convicts are now being employed in building the penitentiaries, and will be for some time?

Mr. HAY. I was coming to that. A great deal of stress has been laid upon the point that it is necessary to give these convicts something to do. As a matter of fact, that question is not imminent now, because these prisoners are now engaged in building this very penitentiary, or a part of it, both in Kansas and in Atlanta.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will also state that, judging by the estimates for the completion of the work and the rapidity with which it has been progressing, it will be several years before they can finish that work.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Kentucky says that it will be several years before the work can be completed. But, Mr. Chairman, apart from that, it does seem to me that the bill is vicious in many other respects. It authorizes to be done a great many things which will inevitably place upon the Government the burden of building this highway. It is placing it on the ground of a military necessity, when no military necessity exists and when no military necessity can exist for the building of this road.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I understand the penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth is under the control of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HAY. The military prisoners are under the control of the Department of War and the federal prisoners under the control of the Attorney-General.

Mr. MANN. That is the Department of Justice. May I ask the gentleman whether this bill was ever referred to the Department of Justice for its opinion in reference to this matter?

Mr. HAY. I am not positive about that, but I do not think it was. I think it was sent to the Secretary of War, but not to the Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know whether the committee ever had before it any expression of opinion from the warden of the penitentiary, who has these prisoners in charge?

Mr. HAY. Not that I know of. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have been opposed to this proposition for several reasons. In the first place, the claim that it is a military necessity or exigency is not well founded.

In the second place, it is a specific appropriation of such favor and benefits as can give free employment to convicts. I do not think that ought to be done, and if we are going to engage in this policy at all, then that embodied in the substitute offered by my colleague from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is the better policy. It provides in general terms that the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General may arrange for the employment of convicts, civil prisoners, and military prisoners upon terms to be reached for their use in the construction of state highways. It further provides that while so engaged in doing work for the highways altogether within a State the expense of their keeping and guarding shall be paid by the communities that are to be benefited.

That seems to me, Mr. Chairman, to be a safe proposition, although the cost of the work is not essential in the consideration of the balance of the substitute bill.

I want also to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that Kansas is not the only State in the Union where there are two military posts. It is not the only State in the Union where a military exigency may be trumped up for the purpose of diverting the labor of these convicts to the local benefits of a community. In Nebraska we have in the vicinity of Omaha, Fort Crook and Fort Omaha. In other States we can find two or more military posts that might be tied together by a road built by federal prisoners at the general expense. At my own home down in San Antonio there is a military post. Sixteen or 18 miles away there is a military reservation where the troops are constantly engaged in target practice, to which place commissary supplies and quartermaster stores are transported every day by wagon. There is just as much reason, Mr. Chairman, and I honestly believe more reason, for the construction of a road by the Government between these important military points as there is for doing it between Fort Riley and Fort Leavenworth, between which two places there are now two great railway systems.

I am not asking, and I shall not ask, that the Government of the United States construct a highway in my county, even though it is desirable to have a good road between those two points for the transportation of the military supplies. I want to say, and in this I differ from my friend from Virginia [Mr. HAY], that I do not want to see the United States undertake the policy of constructing highways. In my judgment the moment that the first bill passes this House, committing the Government of the United States to the construction of roads, then in that moment the good-roads movement among the people of the country will die the death, and from that time forward, forever more, each community in this country will cease to rely upon itself to develop for its own uses its local highways, and will look to the Federal Treasury to supply the means for doing it. As an earnest advocate of the good-roads movement, as a man who has devoted years of effort to the upbuilding of the road system of the country, who has done all that he can to inspire his own community and others in his State to the construction of good roads, I oppose absolutely, and so long as I may have the honor of being a Member of this House, I shall continue to oppose, anything that looks like the construction of highways by the Federal Government.

I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those opposed to both the bill and the substitute. I can not see any good reason for the passage of either. There has been no information laid before this House or before the Committee on Military Affairs which would warrant the passage of either the bill or the substitute. There has been no examination of the question by any competent authority as to what ought to be done for our federal prisoners. There are two great prisons at Leavenworth, one under the Department of Justice and one under the Department of War. The authorities controlling those institutions have in neither instance made any examination or report to anybody as to whether this bill is best fitted to care for the work of those prisoners or not, or as to what would be the facts or advantages as to any other plan. Now, many States of the Union employ their prisoners at some sort of work which does not conflict with labor and which is for the benefit of the prisoners and for the benefit of the State.

The state prison in my State is one of them, and before any measure is passed by this House to utilize the labor of prisoners there ought to be an exhaustive investigation by the authorities having charge of the prisoners and by the proper committees of this House, and we should find out and consider what should be done for the best advantage of the people who pay the bills, and what should be done for the best advantage of the prisoners who are unfortunate enough to be under our charge. No such examination or report has been had or called for concerning this bill or substitute.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this bill merely confers authority on the War Deparment. They will investigate as to whether it is a wise thing to do or not. I think the gentleman's suggestion would be overcome by the fact that the bill is not mandatory, but merely grants authority.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; but it is our business, the business of Congress, to dictate the policy of running our institutions. It is not the business of these departments to dictate what shall be the policy, and it is our business to have the question first investigated by those who know most about it and then make a report to us; and then we should lay down the particular policy as to what should be done thereafter with the prisoners in these great institutions.

No such investigation has been made, no such examination has been had, no report has been had. No committee has investigated it for one single moment or given one moment of thought to it, and here we are attempting to lay down a broad policy as to the employment of prisoners in these great institutions, without any apparent concern as to the welfare of the unfortunates or as to the effect upon the people at large. If there was any imminent necessity for it, there might be consideration given to this bill, but I notice there is an estimate for the next fiscal year of $183,000 for this very penitentiary, so that for a year and a half at least the prisoners will be kept at the work they are now on; and if there is anything sincere in the desire of caring for these prisoners, in looking to or considering their welfare, in laying down a policy as to what ought to be done for them in the future, there is ample time for this investigation to be had, ample time for the department to report to Congress, and ample time for Congress to act upon the measure, so that there is no use, so far as this measure is concerned, of any haste and considering now as to what should be done for the prisoners. They will be occupied for at least a year and a half under the present arrangement.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman tell us how you work the convicts in the State of Minnesota?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. By manufacturing binding twine for our farmers. And the same is done, I think, in the State of North Dakota and the State of South Dakota.

Mr. MADISON. And in the State of Kansas.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. And in the State of Missouri.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The situation in these various States well illustrates what I was stating, that it is a question which deserves the most exhaustive investigation and the most serious consideration by the authorities having charge of these prisoners, and all to be brought to our attention before we finally decide the matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman know that it would take not more than one-twelfth of the men in these institutions to do the work on these roads?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I know nothing about it, and the gentleman does not.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, I do.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No information was given to the committee. The report of the committee conveys no information about this at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill was not presented to President Taft when he was Secretary of War, and did he not state, "I shall be pleased to favor this bill whenever called upon to do so?"

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; I presume so. But that was not the judgment of any man of this committee. We have to legislate for ourselves; the responsibility is upon us. It is information we want and not opinion, even of an eminent man, in a matter of this importance.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Briefly, to call the attention of the gentleman to the words of sections 2 and 3. It looks to me very much like it puts the entire power in the hands of the Secretary of War. Now, suppose the Department of Justice does not desire to cooperate with the Secretary of War and let that class of prisoners be engaged in this class of work, then if this becomes law, would not this condition occur—that one class of military prisoners would be permitted to work on these roads and the federal-court prisoners could not?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman is entirely right about that; there is no doubt about it. There is no definite policy established by this bill at all. Now, another point, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. Was this bill favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It was evidently favorably reported, but at the time several of us notified the committee that we should present our views on the floor, which I am now endeavoring to do.

Mr. SULZER. There was no minority report made.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I have the report of the committee here on the desk——

Mr. SULZER. But I said no minority report.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No; there was not.

Mr. SULZER. Judging by the discussion, I had an idea this bill was adversely reported.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. That is for this committee to ascertain before we get through. Mr. Chairman, there is another aspect that has been discussed, and that is the military feature of it. The department reports—that is, the Quartermaster-General states that it is desirable for military purposes. The two reservations mentioned in this bill are of the greatest in the United States. There are more troops stationed within the borders of Kansas than any other State in the Union. These great posts are about 100 miles apart. It is true that at some time during the year, occasionally in some years, for the purpose of maneuver, the troops may be marched back and forth, and that has been done a few times. But for a real, genuine military purpose I submit to the good sense of this committee if it is not better to have an ordinary road that troops will be obliged to march over in times of ordinary work or in times of maneuvers. Is it not better that they should have to use the ordinary dirt road, which is found anywhere, than a first-class macadamized road built by the government engineers, as provided in this bill? They would not have such a road elsewhere; they do not go to battle or make military campaigns on that kind of a road. If we want to give our troops real instruction in military matters, we want to furnish them conditions that approximate those of actual war and of an actual campaign, and we would not have much actual war on a macadamized road of this nature. Then there is another thing, Mr. Chairman, and I submit it without any attempt to criticise the good people of Kansas. Kansas is remarkably favored in the way of great federal institutions.

As I said, there are more troops kept within the borders of the State of Kansas than in any other State in the Union. Most of our States would be mighty glad to have institutions of this nature; most of us would be mighty glad, and most of the States and most of the localities would be mighty glad to have great institutions, where millions of dollars are expended for their construction, where millions of dollars are spent annually for the maintenance of those great institutions.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question right there——

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. In a moment. Now, is it fair for the State of Kansas to take advantage of the bounty of the Government, which has been showered upon its people and locality, to get another great advantage over the other States of the Union by using our labor to build their own local highways, when there is hardly pretended to be any compensating advantage to the Nation or the national public service?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wanted to ask the gentleman if these two military posts were located in the State of Minnesota and this proposition was before the House, would he be opposed to Minnesota having this road?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I am glad the gentleman asked the question. There is one of the largest reservations in the United States on the borders of my own district—Fort Snelling. St. Paul appropriated $120,000 to make a highway to Fort Snelling; the city of Minneapolis appropriated $150,000 and St. Paul $125,000 for a bridge to help cross the river in order to reach Fort Snelling. That is the way we do business. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. You did not answer my question.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I hope I answered the question.

Mr. AUSTIN. You have not answered my question.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No; not under any circumstances. If the United States will establish a great military reservation in our midst, we will build highways, we will build bridges, and we will do everything we can to assist the United States instead of milking it. And we have done it, and other States are doing it. Other States of the Union are building their highways, are building their bridges, and are making other expenditures to help the Government instead of taking money out of the Government.

Mr. AUSTIN. Suppose a State failed to do that, would you accept this from Congress?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Not under any circumstances. We can build our own highways and pay for them. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. I notice that the gentleman has mentioned a magnificent bridge that the Government has built at Fort Snelling, between Fort Snelling and St. Paul. I would like to ask him out of that government appropriation of $120,000, how much of it went to the street railway corporation?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Not a dollar. The street railway company paid $25,000 for the privilege of crossing the bridge. One half of the whole sum was paid by the city of St. Paul and the other half by appropriation of Congress. The only way the troops can get from that post to St. Paul is by that bridge across the Mississippi River. The United States paid one-half and one-half was paid by the city of St. Paul. We not only paid that, but we paid $120,000 to build a road to it, and the street car company was obliged to pay the Government $25,000 for the privilege of crossing that bridge, and it has to perpetually maintain the space between the car tracks.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Government paid one-half of the construction of that bridge?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. You claimed that your city and your people paid for the whole thing.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I beg your pardon. I did not say that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now you admit that the Government paid part of it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I did not say that. I said that the city paid one-half of the bridge and the city of Minneapolis paid the whole expense of the roadway on the other side.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did you not say in your original statement that the Government paid none of that expense?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No. It was not called for.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why did you not tell us the whole story? Why did you withhold the fact that Congress paid a part of the expense?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, one word more. It does not do any locality any good to have partiality and favors showered upon it. It injures the fiber of the citizens to come to this Government and ask for things which they can better do for themselves, and in a matter of this kind, before we decide upon a measure that is liable to lead to a broad and important policy in the end, we should have the fullest information about what ought to be the best for treating the prisoners, what ought to be really done for military advantage of our Government, and what the localities ought to do for themselves.

I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, there is one question in connection with this proposed legislation which I can not answer to my satisfaction—that is, in such a way that can satisfy me to support the bill—and that question is, By what authority is Congress to engage in the construction of this particular highway?

Confessedly this is not to be a military road; that is to say, it is not to be built because of a military necessity. Nor is it to be a post-road. What character of roads can the Federal Government, under the Constitution of the United States, build except military roads and post-roads? Where is the authority? Surely any road it builds must be for some governmental use, and this proposed road not being a military necessity, not being a post-road, its construction lies absolutely, to my mind, outside of the domain of congressional power.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman consider that the judicial power of the United States empowering the United States to keep its prisoners includes in that the power to keep those prisoners employed?

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, I think the principle involved in this bill is this: If the Federal Government can take its prisoners and enter the limits of a State and perform the functions that ought to be performed by the State or county or township; that is, the construction of a road, not for a military necessity, not as a post-road, but as a simple public highway; if it can do that with its prisoners, then it can appropriate the money direct from the Treasury and substitute its money instead of its convict labor and do the same thing. I can not bring myself to the support of any such policy. If the Federal Government is going to undertake the business of constructing highways, those highways should be for some governmental use. This proposed road is to be a highway simply for the benefit of a locality in the State of Kansas—not a military road, not a post-road, but just an ordinary local highway.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly well aware of the fact that there is widespread sentiment in the Republic for federal aid in the construction of highways. But gentlemen will remember that at no time has anybody ever proposed that the Federal Government had authority to construct a highway unless it needed that highway to use in governmental business.

The fact is that the indirect system of taxation of the Federal Government is responsible for the growing demands upon the Federal Treasury. The citizen does not recognize when he is paying his federal taxes, because the method of collection is indirect rather than direct. But he does realize when he is paying state, county, and municipal taxes, because he takes the cash from his pocket and pays it to the collector and receives only a tax receipt in return. It results, therefore, that many people have come to look upon federal appropriations not as so much spent, but as a gift—as so much picked up. A member of a state legislature, when he returns from the session in his State, will be met by his constituents. They, with a keen, cold gleam in their eyes, say: "How much did you spend?" When a Member of Congress goes to his home, he will be met by that same constituency, and with the same cold gleam in the eyes. They will ask him: "How much did you get?" [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that whether these prisoners are worked or not, they eat the same amount of food, they wear the same amount of clothes, and take the same number of men and amount of money to guard them as when they are kept in the prison. Now, what loss is it to the Government if they are taken outside of the walls and made use of? You are speaking for the taxpayer; where does the taxpayer come in?

Mr. GARRETT. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that in my opinion this bill projects the Federal Government into a work with which the Federal Government has no business to deal.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That doctrine was good a hundred years ago, but not now.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do you not know, when you reach the question of the penitentiary in the district of the gentleman from Georgia, that they have four or five years' work before they complete the work on the branch there?

Mr. GARRETT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman permit me to say in reply to that that this bill provides that whenever they have no work to do inside of the prison a certain number of them only can be worked? The Secretary of War and the Attorney-General may permit them to work outside.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest further, if the gentleman will look at the testimony which I hold in my hand, given before my committee less than two weeks ago, he will see that that time will not be reached for five years yet.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman, I am sorry he did not hear what was said—that they have 800 prisoners in Atlanta. The walls are all built, and they have all the building stone needed for the building of that annex, and only one-third part of the 800 can be worked upon that building. What are you going to do with the balance of them? That is the proposition.

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, this bill embodies two distinct policies: That of giving employment to federal prisoners on the one hand, and that of committing the Federal Government to the construction of state and local highways on the other hand. The question of what shall be done with prisoners in the various penal institutions of the country is one that has troubled the various legislative officers of all the States in the Union. I do not know of any State that has adopted the policy of using inmates of penitentiaries for the general construction of public roads.

It must be borne in mind that the item of individual labor is a comparatively small factor in the cost of the construction of a public highway. The chief cost of the work is in the material, the grading, the hauling of the material, and the rolling of the road. The State of Indiana has built as many miles of public highways as any other State in the Union west of the Alleghenies, according to population, and we know that the factor of wages for manual labor is comparatively small in the construction of a modern highway. It costs us from $4,000 to $6,000 a mile to build roads in our State, and the laborers employed in highway building in Indiana are free, honest laborers. To use penitentiary inmates in the construction of highways is to bring convict labor as much in competition with honest, free labor as if the inmates were used in any line of manufacturing.

In relation to the other policy I can not help but believe that this bill, if enacted into law, will practically adopt the policy of the United States building and improving state highways at the expense of the Federal Government, a policy which I think is objectionable.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Under what policy was the national highway built to Indianapolis?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Under the policy of opening up the country, at a time when there were no railways and when there were practically no local roads. The conditions prevailing, when the national road was built to Indianapolis seventy-five years ago, were materially different from those which now exist. The Federal Government was then justified in building roads as a military necessity and as post-roads, because there were no railroads. We were then building canals all over the country, while to-day we have railroads and other means of intercourse, so that there is no necessity for the adoption of this policy.

Mr. GARRETT. This road is not proposed to be either a military road or a post route.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true; and it will not be under the control of the Federal Government. It will be absolutely under the control of the State of Kansas. If we pass this bill and construct this highway, substantially 100 miles long, it will only be a question of time when, at the expense of the Federal Treasury, thousands of miles of highways will be constructed, which as soon as constructed will be in the ownership and control of the various States through which they pass.

It is practically entering upon a policy that will cost this Government hundreds of millions of dollars, in the doing of a thing that essentially belongs to the various localities. The gentleman from Minnesota suggested that to the States belongs this duty, and the States ought to regard it as a privilege to provide themselves with all of the local facilities that may be necessary for social and commercial purposes. The States ought to construct highways out of their own revenues. Let the Federal Government confine its activities to federal functions, and most of all, let it keep out of the field of the general construction of public roads, unless it shall own and control the operation of the roads. The State of Kansas does not propose to turn over to the United States Government the power to regulate and control this highway, and many of us believe that aside from the labor this road will cost the Government of the United States a good deal ultimately in the way of appropriations from the Federal Treasury to complete the unfinished parts of the highway, to guard the prisoners while so employed, and to provide horses, equipment, and machinery necessary to do the work.

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has the floor.

Mr. ANTHONY. May I suggest that debate be closed in twenty minutes, one-half on each side?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the question ought to be fully debated, and I object to that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Virginia yields five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that we have prisoners at all. How to use them so as to give them employment is a serious question. It is a question which all the States of the Union have been trying to solve for some time. Nobody doubts that prison labor does come into competition with honest, free labor, no matter how the prison labor may be employed. But I undertake to say that no gentleman on the floor of this House will say that the labor employed in the construction of roads throughout the country is not free, honest labor. If these prisoners are employed in the construction of roads, they will come as much into competition with free, honest labor as they do in any other work which they perform. The principle involved in the bill before the House is a dangerous one. All the States of the Union are building their own roads out of their own treasuries from taxes levied and collected from their own people, and the State of Kansas should be no exception to the rule.

There is no more reason why the Federal Government should construct a road in the State of Kansas from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Riley than there is that the Federal Government should be called upon to construct a road from the military post at Chicago to the military post in San Francisco.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is not there just as good reason for the Government of the United States building a road from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Riley as there is for digging a ditch between Chicago and St. Louis? [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. In one case I want to say that the ditch to which the gentleman refers is to be a waterway through which the great ships of the Lakes and seas may carry the products of the labor of the country. [Applause.] And the people of Chicago themselves have so far paid $64,000,000 of their own money for the construction of the ditch to which the gentleman so sarcastically refers without calling upon the Government of the United States for the expenditure of a single dollar. [Applause.]

The State of Illinois, through a vote of its people recently, authorized its legislature to vote $20,000,000 for further expenditure in connection with this great interstate improvement. [Applause.]

I wish to say in further reply to the gentleman from Kansas, that the Middle West, through which this proposed waterway is to run, is a part of that great territory to be served by the transportation facilities which this great waterway will afford; and the one thing for which this waterway is about to be constructed is to enable the reduction and regulation of freight rates by the railroads of this country, and to give an opportunity to every producer in every section of the land for the transportation of the products of his labor at the cheapest possible price. I submit to the House and to the gentleman from Kansas that this is not in any particular like the proposition that is before the House for the construction of a road wholly within the State of Kansas. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE].

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Chairman, I think a fair reading of this bill would lead one to conclude that the Government would do everything connected with this road except to furnish the materials, the rock, the earth, and so forth, needed in the construction of the road. All expense of equipment, teams, scrapers, machinery of any kind, necessary in road construction, I think it could fairly be implied, is to be paid for by the United States Government under this bill.

Now, the very first section says:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to take all necessary steps to utilize the labor of the United States convicts in the construction of this road.

How can you utilize the labor for the construction of the road without supplying the implements necessary for labor to use? The first section of the bill plainly implies authority in the Secretary of War to put the equipment into the hands of this labor for the purpose of constructing this road.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLESPIE. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that I believe the Government now owns all the equipment that will be necessary to use in the actual labor.

Mr. GILLESPIE. If the Government does not own equipment, authority is plainly implied that the Secretary of War may go and buy it. I do not know whether they own all the equipment necessary or not.

Mr. ANTHONY. The first section only says he may utilize the labor.

Mr. GILLESPIE. How are you going to utilize the labor without putting equipment in the hands of labor which it is necessary for the labor to use, such as teams, scrapers, wagons, and other equipment necessary to build the road?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a provision in the bill which expressly forbids the Government, or any officer of the Government, from incurring any indebtedness whatever.

Mr. GILLESPIE. It confers no authority upon any officer to incur any obligation upon the part of the United States "for the acquirement of property," and so forth.

Mr. ANTHONY. Property and material.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Here are two provisions, then, in apparent conflict with each other. You might reconcile them and allow both provisions to stand, if you say that section 8 prevails, except the authority that is conferred by clear implication in the first section of the bill upon the Secretary of War to purchase road equipment, and so forth. Section 8 only prohibits the incurrence of an obligation by an officer or other person against the Government, while in the first section of the bill the obligation against the Government is clearly incurred and there is no necessary conflict, and both provisions may stand. Then both sections would stand together and the fair interpretation of both sections would be that the Secretary of War is to be authorized to purchase these teams and wagons and machinery necessary to construct this road, but he can not incur an obligation for any other purpose. Why not plainly put in the bill what is meant? If all you mean is that the Federal Government shall lend the labor or donate the labor of these convicts and be at no expense except their necessary keep and care anyway, why not plainly say so in your bill? I think any fair construction of this bill would be that the Secretary of War can go on and expend money in his hands for the purpose of purchasing equipment with which to construct this road and feel sure that Congress will be called upon in the future to appropriate for it.

Mr. Chairman, I want to state while I am upon my feet that I do not agree to the proposition advanced here that the Federal Government should go into the different communities and into the different States of this Union and aid in the construction of roads.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do not they do that in waterways now?

Mr. GILLESPIE. We are not talking about waterways. We are doing it along those lines that we ought not to be engaged in. I am now talking about roads. I believe it is unconstitutional and the most expensive form of road construction that ever entered the mind of man, on account of the wild scramble for appropriations, and that it is impossible to adopt an equitable plan of construction for the whole Union in view of the fact that many of the States have already highly developed systems of roads and have taxed their own people many millions to accomplish this, while other States have not taxed their people so much, and consequently are far behind in road construction. I highly favor the employment of federal convict labor upon the public roads without expense to the Federal Treasury other than the usual and ordinary expense necessary in keeping convicts anyway. I shall therefore support the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GILLESPIE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am interested in the gentleman's contention that two paragraphs of the bill, the first and the eighth, can not be construed together; that the first paragraph must control, and that it means that the Secretary of War is to have power to purchase wagons, mules, and so forth. Now, let me ask the gentleman what he has to say of my construction of the two paragraphs. I would read them as if one came immediately after the other, and so, following an ordinary rule of statutory construction, I would treat the last as if it were simply a proviso, thus: "That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to take all necessary steps to utilize the labor of the United States convicts: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall confer upon any officer of the United States or any other person or persons any authority to incur any obligation on the part of the United States for the acquirement of property, the purchase of material, or the maintenance of said highway."

Thus read together the paragraphs are harmonious and their meaning clear. There is express prohibition against the acquirement of property—and "property" includes mules and wagons—and there is also express authority to utilize the labor of the convicts if implements and materials are on hand or are supplied by which it can be utilized. That is the only possible construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CRAIG].

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly this bill will cause the United States to incur an expense whether the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] intends it or not. You can not possibly construe the first section and the last section of this bill together and get any reasonable construction out of it except that the Secretary of War, or the officer authorized to use these prisoners, must furnish them with the implements with which to build this road. If you say that he must not buy any implements, that he must not furnish anything at all for these men to work with, then you say that he must use the labor without giving him anything with which to make that labor effective, and, in effect, that he can not really use it at all, thereby making the bill a nullity; and I am frank to say that the courts might possibly indulge the presumption, violent possibly, but nevertheless they might possibly indulge the presumption that Congress would not do a useless thing, and therefore that Congress meant that these men should be furnished with the implements with which to do the work. It is not right to expend the Government's money in the State of Kansas for this purpose unless it is going to be made a general movement, to be carried out throughout the whole country. [Applause.]

I am in favor of using convict labor on our roads, and I am willing to vote for the substitute; but I am not willing to vote for the bill, because it will entail great expense on the Government, and because it confers upon one State a favor in which the others may not participate. In answer to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] as to his statement that it will be no more expensive to have these men on the public roads than it is to house and feed them in the prison, I desire to say that some years ago I introduced and had passed in the legislature of Alabama a bill authorizing a certain county of that State to use its convicts on the roads. The county made an investigation, and found out that in order to do that they must furnish the equipment, a movable sort of jail or barracks of some kind, in which to shelter these men; that such equipment was very expensive; and up to this time the movement has not been begun, simply and solely because of the expense of housing the men while they are out on the road. The county hopes, however, to purchase the necessary equipment at an early date, and use the convicts as the law provides. Certainly, the contention of the gentleman from Georgia that it will be no more expensive to house these men on the road than in the penitentiary, falls to the ground when considerations of that kind are brought forward, and when we remember that we have the penitentiary, but have not the movable cages or jails.

Convicts ought not to be used in competition with men who are engaged in manufacturing, and I agree with the gentleman from Ohio in his ideas along that line, but I do say that when the Government of the United States commits itself to the policy of using the convicts on the public roads, then every State should have an even and a fair chance to get that convict labor, and to get it on a fair, square footing with every other State, whether they are fortunate enough to have a federal penitentiary within their borders or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains on both sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has sixteen minutes remaining.

Mr. ANTHONY. And the other side has used all of its time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired. Does the gentleman from Minnesota take the floor in his own right?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rose for the purpose of taking the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to be recognized for the remainder of his time?

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas reserves the remainder of his time, and the gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to take very much of the time of the committee. It seems to me that the provision in section 4 of the bill providing for the authorization of the Secretary of War to make use of such available machinery as may be possessed by the Department of Agriculture is, to say the least, an unfortunate provision. We now provide an appropriation for the Office of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture. That is for the purpose of giving education throughout the country in the main. Undoubtedly, if this act should become a law, the result would be that the Department of Agriculture would be called upon to turn over that road-making machinery to the Secretary of War until this road should be completed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. ANTHONY. For the gentleman's information I will say that the Department of Agriculture has, since this bill was drawn up, sold its road-making machinery. It has none. The only machinery it would have left now would possibly be its surveying instruments.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman would be glad to have that provision stricken out of the bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not entirely, because we still want to use the engineer department.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is the provision I am talking about. The gentleman says they have no machinery, so we do not need that provision in the bill. Now, it seems to have been a question here as to whether this bill would authorize any expenditure on the part of the Government for machinery, and it has been asserted on one side that it would cause the Government to incur obligations, and, on the other side, that it would not. I call the attention of the committee to the language of the bill, which seems to be very simple in its purpose and in its operation. Section 1 is:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to take all necessary steps to utilize the labor of United States convicts in the construction of a macadam road, etc.

That is the authority to the Secretary of War, which will warrant an appropriation for that purpose, and in the sundry civil appropriation bill when it comes before the House, if this bill is enacted into law, it will be in order for my distinguished friend from Kansas to arise, if it is not already in the bill, and offer an amendment for the purpose of providing the money with which to buy the machinery in order that this labor may be utilized. The bill itself provides that by the passage of this bill no officer shall incur any obligation on the part of the Government. That is true, but with the bill a law the authority exists and undoubtedly will be made use of, and if the bill passes it should be made use of, to provide the necessary equipment in order that proper use may be made of the labor of these convicts. But, Mr. Chairman, the purpose for which I arose was to make some inquiry as to what the attitude was of the people having in charge these convicts. My distinguished friend from Kansas a little while ago corrected me on the quiet by saying the warden of the penitentiary at Leavenworth was under the War Department, and that there was no way of obtaining the opinion of the warden, but the warden of the penitentiary is not under the War Department, notwithstanding the opinion of my learned friend from Kansas——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Always.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, I would like to correct the gentleman and to say——

Mr. MANN. You did it before.

Mr. ANTHONY (continuing). And to say that the officer in command of the United States prison at Leavenworth is a major and quartermaster of the United States Army and takes orders from the Secretary of War. That is the United States military prison. The gentleman possibly has in mind the United States federal prison under the Department of Justice, to which his assertion would apply, but is incorrect as applying to the United States military prison at Leavenworth.

Mr. MANN. I did not make any statement as to the United States military prison.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought you used the words "United States military prison."

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I have not used them before until now.

Mr. ANTHONY. So the gentleman is half right.

Mr. MANN. I am not half right; I am altogether right on that particular proposition, though goodness knows I am reasonable enough to say I do not get things half right half the time. The gentleman's bill provides in section 2 for the use of prisoners available from the United States military prison, and in addition to those such prisoners as are now confined in the United States Penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kans.

The United States Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., to which I referred, is under the Department of Justice. I hope the gentleman will remember that. It is easy enough in either case to obtain the opinion of the warden. Can it be possible that this House, the national legislative body, can not obtain the opinion of an officer of the Government under its control? I want to know what Major McClaughry thinks of this. He is one of the most distinguished men in this country in reference to convict labor. I would take his judgment against the judgment of anybody that I know upon this question, and yet, although that opinion would be of great value to the House, although the opinion of the Department of Justice ought to at least have been asked for, there is not a line or a suggestion that the men having charge of these prisoners have ever been asked their opinion in reference to the matter; nor were the men in charge of the military prisons asked for their opinions in reference to the matter, if we may judge by the report.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would state for the gentleman's information——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. The opinion of the superior officers of these men has been asked for, the Quartermaster-General, the Chief of Staff, and the Secretary of War, covering the United States military prison.

Mr. MANN. I have great respect for the Quartermaster-General of the army, whom I regard——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit me one step further?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. While I have not the written indorsement of the warden of that prison on file here, yet he has stated to me unequivocally that he thinks that would be the finest solution of the labor problem he knows of.

Mr. MANN. That has great weight with me, and I have no doubt of the statement of the gentleman from Kansas. The Quartermaster-General, when reporting upon this bill, as he was required, made no report indicating that he had asked any information from the warden or the major in charge of these prisoners, but says it would undoubtedly be desirable for military purposes, and so forth, if the labor of federal prisoners is available in this connection, and so forth, and that the cost would be small. He makes no recommendation about it.

Now, I am inclined myself to think that it is a good thing to use convict labor in building roads, but it seems to me that we are taking a rather dangerous step when we engage upon that policy without the information which we ought to have from the people in charge of these prisoners, as to whether this shall be the policy of the Government, because if we say now that we will do this, the chances are that it means that we will embark upon that policy. I do not know, but if it had to be decided now, without any chance for further consideration, and I had to decide it with what limited knowledge I have, and it is extremely limited, I would take the chance of putting these men to work building roads. I think the gentleman ought to obtain more information from the men in charge of these prisoners. It is idle to say it will not cost anything. Does the gentleman know what it cost to subsist the prisoners at Fort Leavenworth prison last year? Or does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] know what it cost to subsist the prisoners at Atlanta last year?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Eleven cents per capita.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the gentleman admit that these prisoners would have to eat inside the walls just the same as they would outside?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, it cost 10½ cents a day per prisoner to subsist the prisoners at Atlanta last year, and it cost 12.2 cents per day to subsist the prisoners at Leavenworth last year. It is perfectly safe to say that if these men go out in the open and engage in work that is worth anything they will not be subsisted for any such sum as that. No man in this country can work in the open air and live on 12.2 cents per day subsistence. And while that may not be an argument against the bill, it is an argument against the reason for passing the bill, namely, that this will not cost anything. If it is right to do it, I do not care what it costs. It is much more important in the end to determine the right thing to do for the convicts, because it is their interest in this matter that we ought to largely consider.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman that our prisoners, up to this time, have been worked at hard work—such as cutting stone, placing stone, and the like—and they have lived on 11 cents a day.

Mr. MANN. Why, the gentleman from Georgia a little while ago was telling how the prisoners at his prison had nothing to do.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What I said was, if they had nothing to do.

Mr. MANN. It is a terrible thing, in his opinion, because the prisoners had nothing to do.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. MANN. It would be a matter of humanity to pass this bill, so that these prisoners might have work to do.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman does not change his remarks in the RECORD, I am willing to let it stand.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. All right. I said when they completed this work they would have nothing to do, and I repeat it.

Mr. MANN. If it is a matter long in the future, if it is a question to ascertain whether these prisoners shall have nothing to do years from now, we had better let it go until we acquire more information. If there is any pressing necessity that these prisoners shall do something, let us learn of the men in charge of these men as to what ought to be done before undertaking to pass upon it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. MANN. I will if I can.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman has doubted the wisdom of enacting this legislation on account of the insufficiency of information. I want to ask him, inasmuch as this bill leaves it to the judgment of the Secretary of War, if he would not be willing to leave the wisdom of putting it into effect with the Executive, the President of the United States, and the Secretary of War?

Mr. MANN. Well, the President of the United States nor the Secretary of War is the legislative branch of the Government. But if it were the policy——

Mr. ANTHONY. But the gentleman has just said he did not want to proceed on this because there was no direct recommendation from the War Department.

Mr. MANN. If my distinguished friend, asking a question, will permit me to answer, I will be greatly obliged to him. Neither the President of the United States nor the Secretary of War constitutes the legislative branch of the Government. It is for us to determine what our policy shall be in reference to our convicts. It is not the duty of the Secretary of War to determine that policy; and while we ought to obtain his opinion before we act concerning men under his control, it would be idle to say we will leave it to him to determine whether he enforce the acts of Congress. Have we gotten to the point where, when passing acts of Congress, we shall leave it to the Secretary of War or anybody else to determine whether those acts shall be enforced or not? If this bill passes, it ought to be, and I believe will be, the duty of the Secretary of War to enforce it. It would be nonsense to pass it on any other terms.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say for the gentleman's information I believe, as the law exists now, the Secretary of War has absolute power to say what those prisoners shall do so long as they stay on the military reservation. In the past the Secretary of War has abolished convict labor in the production of articles which came in conflict and competition with free labor; and I believe that course will be pursued also in this case. And it is because we believed he will pursue the same course we felt that was the proper procedure that has brought us in here.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman assumes that the Secretary has now the power.

Mr. ANTHONY. He has not the power to work them off the reservation, but he has the power to do anything he pleases with them on the reservation.

Mr. MANN. The fact that the men in charge of these prisoners ask for authority to control them, I assume, is a confession that in their minds they have not the power they think they ought to have. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest, as I am sure all the Members of the House have, to the discussion of this bill. No one who has listened to the debate can have overlooked the fact that every man who has opposed the bill is opposed to it with a reservation that he is in favor of the use of convict labor in the construction of roads.

Mr. GARRETT. I hope the gentleman will exclude me from that class.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Provided it is done in his section and in his State.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will modify the statement by excepting the gentleman from Tennessee.

In one instant gentlemen are opposed to the bill only because the head of some department does not unqualifiedly indorse it, and being reminded that the responsibility is upon us to outline and lay out such a policy, they give some other equally untenable reason for opposing the bill. Now, there are few men here who do not believe that the solution of the prison-labor problem is to use it upon the public highways. I doubt if there are many men in this House who have not so stated on the hustings to their constituents.

Mr. COCKS of New York. I have not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There are few prison reformers in the United States who have not at some time advocated the use of prison labor upon the highways and given many reasons for it. The letter read here by my colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] from the warden of the Kansas State Penitentiary is illuminating upon that question. This policy has made the convicts in the Kansas prison model prisoners. They seek an opportunity and court the favor of the warden, with a view of getting outside of the walls of the prison, wearing overalls and broad-brimmed hats, working on the highways. The letter states that these prisoners are not shackled and are under a guard who is unarmed. It seems that no one can state a substantial objection to using labor of this character in the construction of public highways. Prisoners must work at something. They should not compete with labor in manufacture or mining. I think most of the gentlemen who have opposed the bill would be willing to concede that, but they are not in favor of this particular proposition, because the warden of the penitentiary has not stated that it was a good thing and because the Secretary of War only says that it is a good thing, but does not state it is a military necessity.

The fact is that the War Department has given as much of an indorsement to this bill as it is proper for any department to give as to the passage of any act by this House. The War Department was not called upon for a policy as to the use of prison labor, but for the particular plan of using the prison labor in the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., on a road between Fort Leavenworth and Fort Riley, and they unqualifiedly commit themselves to the proposition that it is their opinion that it would be a proper way to use that labor.

Many men who have opposed this bill shrink from it because it may entail a small expense. I do not agree with the construction that has been placed on sections 1 and 2 of the bill by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] nor by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. Plainly those sections do not authorize the purchase of machinery or equipment, limited as they are by section 8. Sections 1, 2, and 8 must be construed together. For myself I will say that I would not shy from the proposition if it provided for even a considerable expense. I can think of few, if any, better purposes to which we could put money than to provide for good roads with it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. On that subject I should like to have the view of the gentleman from Kansas. It seems to me quite apparent that it is one thing to take care of prisoners in a government penitentiary and quite a different thing to work them upon a road 5, 10, or 15 miles from that penitentiary. The first section here authorizes the Secretary of War to take all necessary steps to utilize the labor of United States convicts. In view of what the gentleman has just stated, I should like to ask him whether that would not authorize the Secretary of War to provide temporary equipment, consisting of guardhouses, tents, and the paraphernalia for keeping men in the field for the purpose of working them at long distances from the penitentiary?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not familiar with the details of what would be necessary in using prisoners at long distances from the penitentiary. I do not know how they should be housed, but I take it that it will add but little to the expense of keeping the prisoners—to feed and house them out on the work. They have guards day and night in the penitentiary. The War Department has tents. It has camp equipment, and can use its tents and camp equipment, and the guards that are used at the penitentiary can be used to guard the prisoners out on the highway.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Whatever may be necessary in order properly and economically to use that labor at long distances from the penitentiary the Secretary of War will undoubtedly have authority to provide under this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think so.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. So that whatever theory may have been advanced here that this would not entail any expense in equipment is hardly justified in face of the language of that section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think the War Department under any authority conferred by this bill could purchase tents or camp equipment; but it would not be necessary to do that, for, as I have stated, the department has tents and camp equipment now.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Certainly, without some modifying language the Secretary of War could take all necessary steps to use this labor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But, as I say, sections 1 and 2 must be construed in connection with section 8, which provides that no property may be acquired under this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That language is ambiguous, and taking the two together it raises quite a doubt as to the meaning of the act. It seems to me that authority is given, taking the whole subject together, and certainly would form the basis of an appropriation covering the whole question of equipment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Section 8 says:

> Nothing herein contained shall confer on any officer of the United States, or any other person or persons, any authority to incur any obligation on the part of the United States for the acquirement of property, the purchase of material, or the maintenance of said highway.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That language as to incurring obligations is somewhat ambiguous. It would probably mean incurring obligations in the future, but in connection with the first section it would leave great doubt as to whether the Secretary of War is not authorized to take the necessary steps looking to the furnishing of this equipment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a suggestion, that we close debate at 5 o'clock.

Mr. PAYNE. And I would like five minutes of that time.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman means to close general debate?

Mr. ANTHONY. To close general debate at 5 o'clock and proceed with the reading of the bill. I will make that motion, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor in his own right.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, some one at some time, and at some place, must begin this kind of work with prison labor, if it is to be undertaken at all, and undoubtedly it should be undertaken. It must commence in Georgia, or in Kansas, or in Texas, or in Iowa, or in New York. It so happens that the most favorable place to-day for the use of convict labor under the control of the United States is within the State of Kansas.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman agree to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia giving authority in a general way to the Secretary of War?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not in charge of this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman favor that amendment? I will remind the gentleman that if Kansas is the most favorable place in the United States to do the work, he would not run any risk in accepting the substitute, because it is fair to say that the Secretary of War would have to take that place.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the substitute should be adopted, would the gentleman from Nebraska vote for the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want to see a few miles of good road made in the United States by prison labor, to demonstrate the wisdom and usefulness of that way of employing convict labor, and I do not care much where the work begins.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, that would do it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I submit, Mr. Chairman, to the Members of the House that we have rarely had an opportunity in this Congress to do a wiser or a better thing for the whole country than to start this policy by utilizing the prison labor under the control of the United States Government in road making.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. What legal right has the Government to build a road in any way unless it is a post-road or a military necessity?

Mr. CAMPBELL. What legal right has the Government of the United States to expend a dollar for the suppression or extinction of the boll weevil?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. What constitutional right has the Government to spend a dollar to make any part of the Mississippi River navigable?

Mr. GARRETT. That is a very different proposition, where it is navigable.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, where it is not navigable?

Mr. GARRETT. Where it is not navigable it can be made navigable.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It can by appropriating enough money.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman from Kansas say that the Government has no right to spend money for suppression of the boll weevil?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Whether we have the right or not, we have been doing it, and on the urgent request of gentlemen on that side of the aisle.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman asked me, and I answered him. Now, what does the gentleman think about it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Tennessee said that he did not know. I say I do not think the Constitution ever contemplated the expenditure of a single dollar for the suppression of the boll weevil. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Did the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; I thought it necessary.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman think two wrongs will make a right?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; but it is too late to impose a constitutional inhibition to appropriations of that kind, or to say there is want of constitutional authority to do something for which there appears to be a public possible necessity.

Mr. Chairman, in further answer to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], let me say, the Government of the United States, under the Constitution, has always responded to the necessities of the conditions that arise. I like that feature of the Constitution. It responds to our necessities. There has never been a great necessity or occasion for action where the Constitution has stood in the way of whatever action was necessary for the common welfare.

Gentlemen here contend or admit that we have a right under the Constitution to make nonnavigable streams navigable and to dig canals, and no one will now say that there is no warrant for doing such work under the Constitution.

Mindful of the public welfare, we make appropriations for these purposes wherever it has been thought wise to do so. But I want to remind gentlemen that the commerce carried on the public highways is far greater than the commerce carried upon the navigable rivers of the country, whether they are naturally navigable or have been made so by the expenditure of money by the Government.

No one will question that the commerce of the country, great as it is, is first transported on the public highways, whether the roads are good or bad. This is particularly true of the products of agriculture, of mines, and of forests. We have in the run of the years appropriated over $500,000,000 for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. We are spending anywhere from three hundred and seventy-five to five hundred millions on the Isthmian Canal, all to carry a commerce that must first be taken from the point of production to these avenues and instruments of transportation.

In the single year of 1906, which is the only one for which I have the figures, it cost, in round numbers, $1,000,000,000 to carry the products of the country to the shipping points from the points where they were produced and only $700,000,000 for carrying them from the shipping point to the point of consumption. The average cost of transporting a ton a mile over our dirt roads in the United States is 25 cents per ton, while in European countries it is from 10 to 12 cents per ton over their macadam roads.

It having cost us a billion of dollars in one year to take our products to shipping points over our dirt roads, at 25 cents per ton, it is easy to see that if we reduced the cost of hauling on dirt roads from 25 cents to 10 or 12 cents per ton on macadam roads, that we would save $500,000,000 annually of this primary cost in our commerce, and this, too, without depriving anyone of work or doing anyone an injury.

When we pay $500,000,000 or $800,000,000 to the railways for transportation, the money is paid to labor for doing office work and handling trains and purchasing material and keeping up tracks and paying taxes and dividends, but of that more than $1,000,000,000 that it costs to haul our products to the railroad stations or other shipping points over dirt roads more than one-half is waste. The loss of time, wear, and tear on horses and other draft animals, and on wagons and harness, is an element of waste; and yet Members on this floor shirk from embarking on a policy which it is confidently hoped, if pursued, will finally result in making many miles of good road, and the principal excuse given is that it would cost something extra to feed the prisoners and to give them shelter while they are doing the work.

Mr. Chairman, I hope to live to see the day in this House when we shall as cheerfully appropriate money to aid in the making of good roads throughout the country as we do now for improving rivers and harbors and to make an interoceanic canal.

I believe there is ample constitutional warrant for national aid in the improvement of our highways. We have clear constitutional warrant for the construction of military and post-roads. The railroads of the country make military roads no longer a military necessity, but we to-day have a greater necessity for post-roads than ever before in the history of the country. Almost every highway throughout the country is used daily by mail carriers carrying the United States mail to the people living along these roadways.

On March 14, 1818, a resolution was adopted in this House declaring that the House has power under the Constitution to appropriate money for the construction of post-roads.

There is a clear grant of such authority.

There were great lawyers in that House—as great constitutional lawyers as there are here to-day. In 1818 Henry Clay said, speaking on the question of good roads to be built by the Government:

> Of all the modes in which a government can employ its surplus revenue, none is more permanently beneficial than that of internal improvement. Fixed to the soil, it becomes a durable part of the land itself, diffusing comfort and activity and animation on all sides. The first direct effect is on the agricultural community, into whose pockets comes the difference in the expense of transportation between good and bad ways. Thus if the price of transporting a barrel of flour by the erection of the Cumberland trunpike should be lessened $2, the producer of the article would receive that $2 more now than formerly.

John C. Calhoun in 1817, and he claimed always to adhere to the Constitution, said:

> Let it not be said that internal improvements may be wholly left to the enterprise of the State and of individuals. I know that much may justly be expected to be done by them; but in a country so new and so extensive as ours, there is room enough for all the general and state governments and individuals to exert their resources. Many of the improvements contemplated are on too great a scale for the resources of States or of individuals, and many of such a nature that the rival jealousy of the State, if left alone, might prevent. They require the resources and general superintendence of the Government to effect and complete them.
> But there are higher and more powerful considerations why Congress should take charge of this subject. If we were only to consider the pecuniary advantages of a good system of roads and canals it might indeed admit of some doubt whether they ought not to be left alone wholly to individual exertion, but when we come to consider how intimately the strength and political prosperity of the Republic are connected with this subject, we find the most urgent reasons why we should apply our resources to them. Good roads and canals, judiciously laid out, are the proper remedy. Let us, then, bind the Republic together with a perfect system of roads and canals.

Cooley, in his Constitutional Law (and it is directly to the point)—it was uttered before we had rural mail routes on practically all the highways of the country—says:

> Every road within a State, including railroads, canals, turnpikes, and navigable streams, existing or created within a State, becomes a post-road whenever, by the action of the Post-Office Department, provision is made for the transportation of the mails upon or over it.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, if we are embarking by this bill on a broader and more comprehensive plan than is apparent on the face of it I would not shrink from it. In this bill we are only seeking to authorize the use of the prison labor under control of the United States authorities in the construction of a road between two military posts.

Gentlemen say that it will establish a precedent. If it does so, it will be a precedent which it will not be unwise to follow if it leads to the construction of good roads for the use of our people.

There are few, if any, public improvements that could be undertaken that would benefit so many of the people. Good roads would add to the attractiveness of farm life more than any other one thing. It is too much of an undertaking for the local communities. The State and National Government will have to lend every possible aid. We can begin by using the prisoners under the control of the United States, and after we have show the wisdom of that step we can take another.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a way, if the gentleman will permit me, under which the Constitution of the United States could respond in this instance.

Mr. MANN. Is this war with Japan? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOBSON. When the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is offered I shall offer an amendment which I believe will clear up all constitutional difficulties, and with the permission of the gentleman from Kansas I will ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the amendment for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that his amendment be read for the information of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That such convict labor shall not be employed in the construction of any road until the plans for such road have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, as promoting the military or postal service of the United States, nor shall such employment exceed in any case the equivalent of one-half of the total cost of construction.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield to me five minutes that I may explain what the amendment is?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would remove the constitutional difficulty in the way.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe it has been conceded by the advocates of this measure that there is no military necessity for this road, nor would this promote the postal functions of the Government.

Mr. HOBSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, if that were the case, the Secretary of War could not approve the plans, and the road would never be built; it would be left, as in all other cases, to be settled entirely on its merits, and held within constitutional limitations. A further reason why I offer this amendment is that, so amended, this measure would be a starting point for inaugurating a legitimate and wise national policy of cooperation in road building.

The railroads of the country have the incentive of remuneration to insure private enterprise in their development. This incentive is lacking for the highways. The great development of railroad systems is one of our greatest causes of prosperity, and the backward condition of our highways constitutes the greatest economic burden and loss that the Nation now sustains. Of course the roads are of prime concern to the communities and the States, but they are also interstate and national in their benefits. The roads of Alabama ought to fit into the roads of Tennessee on the north, the roads of Georgia on the east, the roads of Mississippi on the west, and of Florida on the south, as the railroads do, and the whole highway system of America ought to be constructed according to some agreed plan.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does not the Constitution now give Congress the right to build post-roads, rural-carrier routes, if you please, or anything else of the kind?

Mr. HOBSON. It certainly does.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then what do we want with your amendment?

Mr. HOBSON. The amendment is to have the Secretary of War verify that a road is for a constitutional purpose before the Government takes part in its construction. The time ought to be hastened when the United States Government shall provide a plan to systematize the development of the roads of the United States.

A survey ought to be made by the Government to determine the highway chart or plan, showing the natural development of roads connecting the centers and areas of production with the centers and areas of consumption, connecting the centers of population, taking advantage of the topography of the country. There would be natural trunk lines like trunk lines of railroads. Doubtless a series of them would extend from the Great Lakes to the Gulf; another series from the Mississippi to the two oceans. The state roads and county roads and local roads would be natural feeders to these trunk lines, and where adaptable would be turned into parts of the trunk lines. After the general survey is made, then the detailed surveys could be made, and then each county, each State, and the whole United States would have a rational plan toward which to work, all plans being part of the whole plan. Then the Government would have a rational basis upon which to cooperate with the States in developing roads when they would promote the military and postal service. In no case do I think the Government ought to bear more than half the total expense. Under the present bill as amended the Government could only pass upon plans submitted in each case by the state authorities.

Ere long, through cooperation of the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Public Roads, and the War Department, and through the establishment of a national highway survey, the national plans could be developed, and then the people in all their organizations, public and private, local, state, and national, could cooperate throughout the whole land and proceed in a systematic, scientific, and economical way to strengthen the weakest link in our American civilization.

At first sight the cost might appear large, but it would be one of the best investments the people could make. The cost would be small compared to the staggering loss now being borne on account of bad roads. The isolation of the farm would gradually disappear. All rural values would be enhanced. Then we could partially turn the current that has been setting so heavily toward the cities back to the farm.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, this measure, as perfected, could at best only be a first indirect step. But it would be a step, and if it can be perfected, I hope it will be passed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately there is a penitentiary located in the town in which I live——

Mr. BUTLER. I think that is a good thing.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). Which belongs to the State of New York—no; the people there do not need it. About ten years ago the State of New York thought they would try the experiment of utilizing convict labor in making roads. They built a road, I think, about a mile in length within 2 miles of the location of the state prison and employed convict labor so far as they could utilize it; but, of course, they had to hire the teams and men to run the teams, and they had to prepare the material and draw it to the road, perhaps a distance of 2 or 3 miles, and in the course of a summer of considerable effort they had about a mile of the road built. I do not remember the exact figures that it cost the State, outside of the free convict labor that they used, to build this road. However, it was several thousand dollars, and if my memory is correct it cost something over $7,000 to build this mile of road.

It was a pretty good road, almost as good as the roads that we are building now and called "state roads," some of which cost, including the entire expense of labor, wagons, and all, from $5,000 to $8,000 a mile. They build still better roads that cost from $10,000 to $12,000 a mile in our State now—these state roads. The result of it was that the State of New York was too wise to go on with that experiment and, so far as I know, they have never built a rod of road since in that way, as it was too expensive and they could not afford it. The plan by which the State now operates is, the State pays half the expense of the road which they may adopt and the county 35 per cent and the towns 15 per cent. Under this plan we are building roads as cheaply as we built them before with the convict labor thrown in. It did not pay and it will not pay the Government of the United States to build a road which they can legitimately build anywhere in the United States.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We have learned a good deal more since then.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not wonder, Mr. Chairman, when we are contemplating that this Government shall build a road 125 miles in length——

Mr. NORRIS. Ninety miles.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, ninety, which is long enough where the United States has no business to build a road, that it engenders a sort of Colonel Sellers feeling in the mind of the eminent gentleman from Alabama, who sees golden dreams and visions of roads built all over the United States, a grand central road somewhere, to be followed by roads in every State and everywhere, built in the United States, where post-roads never did exist.

I do not know whether he proposes any national highway across the Pacific Ocean to protect us from the murderous Japs or not.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]?

Mr. PAYNE. Let me finish this sentence. I presume that must have been in his visions and dreams at the same time he was expanding these roads all over the United States. And yet, Mr. Chairman, right here is a warning to the gentlemen who must act upon this proposition. This is the way all precedents are made. They come in here with a proposition—and we have a good many smooth-tongued orators who are even capable with their oratory to wipe out with a breath any proposition in the Constitution of the United States——

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PAYNE. Who could create material without the cost of a penny; who could gather in teams and drivers and machinery without any cost to the Treasury of the United States; and when you talk to them about the cost they say the Secretary of War can furnish tents and house these convicts when they go a few miles from the penitentiary, and it does not cost anything to guard them, because they need fewer guards on the outside of the walls than within. That was not the experience at Auburn with the state road, which is both outside and inside of the city limits. They had to have more guards and more people, and we have a pretty respectable class of prisoners there, that come to us from the surrounding towns of Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, and the western part of the State of New York. They are a pretty respectable class, and still we had to have additional guards.

Now, just then we did not have any particular business for the convicts to do. They had gotten rid of the contract system by a vote of the people of the State, and we were looking around for work for the convicts. After we had gotten through with the road proposition by a mile of experiment we did not try that business any more. We tried another way to employ them, and to employ them in the state prison.

And we are building our roads by free, honest labor of the citizens of the State of New York. We are building good roads, we are building them at moderate expense on contracts, and we are getting in the way of keeping them in repair, and we are going to have roads all over the State independent of asking the Treasury of the United States and the Congress of the United States to lay aside the Constitution and build roads. Kansas asks for a road a hundred miles in length, because one end of it comes somewhere near a federal prison.

Now, if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] will give me his attention I will be glad to hear from him.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I merely interrupted the gentleman because of his interpretation of what I had said and of my position, and it is clear that the gentleman did not hear the whole of the amendment that I offered, because the latter part of it restricted the Government's cooperation to not exceed one-half of the equivalent of the cost of construction, which implied, of course——

Mr. PAYNE. One-half would ruin the United States Treasury. Ten per cent of it would cost more than your war with Japan will cost in a thousand years. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOBSON. I would say to the gentleman that, if he puts that out, it will probably result in a small portion of good to the country that would result in an expenditure that would escape war with Japan.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is always spending money from the Treasury. It does not cost him a cent. We spend the money in the United States Treasury always for the old flag and the appropriation. Now, he wants more battle ships; he wants to crowd our shipyards with them in order to prevent a war with Japan, and all the time he goes around the country talking about a war with Japan, trying to bring it on, or else creating a scare in order to force Congress into building a lot of battle ships for the sake of preventing a war with Japan. [Laughter.] And so, when this good-roads proposition comes up—the penitentiary road proposition—he immediately seizes on the occasion, and in his fertile imagination he sees these roads built all over the great area of the United States, illimitable almost in extent, and built out of the National Treasury. I do not know what proposition will come up here next, but if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] happens to be here with his fertile imagination, he will start another chance to spend the money of the taxpayers of the United States by the thousands of millions in order to build something of great national importance after we have exhausted the Treasury with war ships or to build good roads. Oh, deliver the country from the fertile imagination of the gentleman who comes here from Alabama! [Loud applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he intends to go on with the debate and finish this bill this afternoon, or whether——

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the House will proceed with the second reading of the bill and dispose of it. There has been a lot of time unnecessarily wasted. I think in justice to the measure we ought to vote on it to-night. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" and "Read!"]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing, if the House does not want to go on with the debate, but to go home, that the committee rise and not take any further time in debate this afternoon; but I do not propose to have this important measure passed without having finished what I wish to say on the bill, which will probably take an hour. But in order to let the House go home, I think I will move the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the report that it has come to no resolution thereon; and then next Wednesday the gentleman can take it up and consider it in very much better form than to-night. I therefore move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14547) providing for a military highway between Forts Riley and Leavenworth, Kans., and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 22643) making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report (No. 715), ordered to be printed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia reserves all points of order on the bill.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 18162, the agricultural appropriation bill, be taken from the Speaker's table, that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the agricultural appropriation bill with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. SCOTT, Mr. COCKS of New York, and Mr. LAMB.

CERTIFICATE TO PRINT PHOTOGRAPH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a certificate to print one photograph in House Document No. 720, Dunkirk Harbor, New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the order to print the lithograph?

Mr. MANN. Is that a report from the War Department, from the engineer's office?

The SPEAKER. It is a report from the War Department, and this is to print a lithograph. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who may so desire may extend their remarks in the RECORD in regard to the bill for the construction of a highway between Forts Riley and Leavenworth, Kans.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that gentlemen may have leave to extend remarks in the RECORD upon the bill for the construction of a highway between Forts Riley and Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman mean those who have spoken; and if so, for how long a time?

Mr. ANTHONY. Those who desire, and for any reasonable time.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not agree to a "reasonable" time. Say for five days. The gentleman ought to make the request that those who have spoken may have leave to extend for five days.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman so modify his request?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this request limited to remarks on this bill for the construction of the road?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred Senate resolution 26, submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], to report it favorably with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Senate resolution 26.

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce or any subcommittee thereof be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee, and to have the hearings, bills, and such papers and documents as may be deemed necessary printed for the use of the committee, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were, in line 6, after the word "hearings," to strike out the words "bills, and such papers and documents as may be deemed necessary;" in line 7, before the word "use," to strike out "the" and insert "its;" and after the word "use," to strike out the words "of the committee," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee, and to have the hearings printed for its use, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

TEMPORARY WITHDRAWALS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21428) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of public lands for certain purposes, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 367) thereon. As a present necessity seems to exist, I ask for the consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to aid in carrying out the purposes of section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending 1895, and for other purposes," it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior, upon application by the proper officer of any State or Territory to which said section applies, to withdraw temporarily from settlement or entry areas embracing lands for which the State or Territory proposes to make application under said section, pending the investigation and survey preliminary to the filing of the maps and plats and application for segregation by the State or Territory: Provided, That if the State or Territory shall not present its application for segregation and maps and plats within one year after such temporary withdrawal the lands so withdrawn shall be restored to entry as though such withdrawal had not been made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the Senator asking for present consideration make a brief statement as to its purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The statement is simply this: It often occurs that a State has determined to make application to have lands segregated under the Carey Act. Before the application is acted upon by the Secretary of the Interior some gentlemen with a speculative frame of mind, thinking that it would come under the Carey Act, come in and make entries under other acts, to the great detriment of the Carey Act proposition. This is to provide that, when a State makes its application, before action is taken upon it the Secretary of the Interior, upon the application of the State, may withdraw those lands from any entry except under the Carey Act.

Mr. HEYBURN. While the bill is not up for discussion, I would suggest that it should include a restriction against what are called "withdrawals for water power and water purposes."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I doubt if that has anything in particular to do with this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. CROIX RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MARTIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6851) authorizing the village of Taylors Falls, Minn., and the village of St. Croix Falls, Wis., to construct a bridge across the St. Croix River, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 368) thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the construction, repair, and maintenance of ditches, reservoirs, and dams, and so forth, on page 5, line 11, after the word "one," to insert "chief;" in line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand;" in line 15, after the word "dollars," to strike out "not to exceed five superintendents of irrigation, who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, at not to exceed $2,000 per annum each, $10,000;" in line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert "and 50 cents;" on page 6, line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three thousand eight" and insert "four thousand two;" and in line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, may employ superintendents of irrigation who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, not to exceed seven in number, five of whom shall receive salaries not exceeding $2,500 per annum," so as to read:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit reasonable expenditures from this appropriation for preliminary surveys and investigations to determine the feasibility and estimated cost of new projects, or to prevent the Bureau of Indian Affairs from having the benefit of consultation with engineers in other branches of the public service or carrying out existing agreements with the Reclamation Service; for pay of one chief inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $4,000; one assistant inspector of irrigation, who shall be a skilled irrigation engineer, $2,500; for traveling expenses of two inspectors of irrigation, at $3.50 per diem when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses authorized by law, and for incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing and expense of going to and from the seat of government, and while remaining there under orders, $4,200; in all, $259,800: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, may employ superintendents of irrigation who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, not to exceed seven in number, five of whom shall receive salaries not exceeding $2,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 7, to insert:

That the act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 794), entitled "An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes,'" be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding to section 1 thereof the following:

"And provided further, That wherever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that lands on any Indian reservation subject to allotment under the provisions of the general allotment laws of the United States can be brought within any irrigation project, he may make allotments of such irrigable lands to the Indians entitled thereto in such areas as may be for their best interests, not to exceed 40 acres to any one Indian: Provided, however, That such irrigable lands to be allotted as herein provided shall be held to be equal in quantity to twice the number of acres of agricultural land and four times the number of acres of grazing lands authorized to be allotted under the provisions of the general allotment laws of the United States: And provided further, That the remaining area to which any Indian may be entitled under existing law, after he shall have received his proportion of irrigable land on the basis aforesaid, shall be allotted from the agricultural or grazing lands."

During the reading of the amendment,

Mr. KEAN. Let us have an explanation of that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary has not concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wanted to move to amend the amendment right at the point where the Secretary was reading.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not hear the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When the Secretary has completed the reading of the amendment, the Senator from Idaho desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will wait, Mr. President.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. In line 24, on page 6, before the word "acres," I move to strike out "40" and in lieu to insert "80," so as to read:

Not to exceed 80 acres to any one Indian.

Mr. CLAPP. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I doubt the wisdom of that amendment. It has been determined that under the conditions 40 acres are quite sufficient land for even white men to cultivate. I think the Senator from Idaho, upon reflection, will conclude that it is quite impracticable for an Indian to cultivate successfully on an average to exceed 40 acres, or even half that quantity. The fact must be borne in mind in dealing with these Indian allotments that every member of the tribe, minors as well as adults, receives the allotment. Hence it often happens that the head of a family will have, if there is a family of five children, with a father and a mother, 280 acres of irrigable land in one body. I think common experience will bear witness that no white man, howsoever industrious or competent he may be, can successfully cultivate such a large body of land under a system of irrigation.

But if the cumulative holding is not taken into account at all, I believe that 40 acres is the maximum which an Indian could be expected to successfully and carefully cultivate in any part of this country; and in the southern portion, in the fruit-growing region, such lands as are to be allotted to the Yuma Indians in an irrigation project, 10 to 20 acres would be an abundance of land.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think if the Senator would first allow me to state the reason, as I base the amendment upon more than mere estimate or conjecture, he would understand the motive.

These particular Indians have been dealt with by Congress in recent years, and a contract or a treaty was made. This is a question whether we shall abrogate that treaty in this legislation. The Indians are perfectly willing to reopen the treaty, provided that their views may be at least in part given regard to.

The act of February 23, 1889, a memorandum of which I have before me, Twenty-fifth Statutes at Large, 687, provides for the allotments of these very lands in the Fort Hall Reservation. It reads:

To each head of the family not more than one quarter section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-quarter of a section.

To each single person over 18 years, and each other person under 18 years now living, or who may be born prior to said allotments, not more than one eighth section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section.

Now, there was a contract really between Congress and these Indians, and the consideration which the Government received for making that contract was the cession of very extensive rights and very large bodies of land.

Three years afterwards Congress again by the act of February 28, 1891, provides:

Where the treaty or act of Congress setting apart such reservation—

That is, dealing with this—provides for the allotment of lands in severalty to certain classes in quantity in excess of that herein provided, the President, in making allotments upon such reservations shall allot the land to each individual Indian of said classes belonging thereon in quantity as specified in such treaty or act and to other Indians belonging thereon in quantity as herein provided.

The Indians have some regard for that treaty, and I think they have kept their part of it very faithfully.

Mr. CARTER. The amendment, the Senator will perceive, applies not only to the Fort Hall Reservation, but to all reservations throughout the country.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; this is the Fort Hall allotment act.

Mr. CARTER. I understand; that is the act to which the Senator refers, but the amendment under consideration, as I understand it, beginning with line 18, on page 6——

Mr. HEYBURN. Line 8.

Mr. CARTER. But the particular part I refer to begins on line 18.

Mr. HEYBURN. The first lines are cited, but the proposed amendment is confined to these Indians.

Mr. CARTER. But the Senator will observe that that portion of the amendment beginning in line 18 applies without any limitation to all reservations in the United States or in any of the Territories. Now, I think——

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I can aid the Senator there.

Mr. CARTER. I think the Senator's purpose can be served very well by a proviso reading somewhat as follows—I merely suggest it:

Provided, That the acreage limitation herein contained shall not apply to the lands heretofore embraced in the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in the State of Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say to the Senator that the amendment is made general at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. We have no present interest in applying this outside of the Fort Hall Reservation, because that is an allotment about to be made. I have no objection at all to confining it to the Fort Hall Reservation, but the commissioner wants it made general.

Mr. CARTER. It may be made general. I think that a 40-acre limitation of irrigated land to be allotted to an Indian ought to apply generally; but in the case of the Fort Hall Reservation, since the treaty stipulation would be invaded, according to the view of the Senator, the proviso I have suggested would except that reservation from the 40-acre limitation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. PAGE. I understand the Senator from Idaho to say that this proposed amendment of his is in accordance with the ideas of the Indian Department. Am I right about that?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will allow me just a moment, because I wish to know that I am not wrongly advised about the matter, this amendment is in accordance with a bill introduced by the Senator from Idaho and referred to a subcommittee. That subcommittee asked the department for its advice in regard to it, and the report was that the bill should not, in the opinion of the department, be passed without amendment. The suggestion of the department was taken to the Senator from Idaho, and through his secretary a new bill or amendment was drafted, which has been incorporated into this bill; and that amendment, as I understand it, is in exact accord with the views of the Indian Department. If I am mistaken, I should like to be corrected.

Mr. HEYBURN. There has been no difference of opinion as to the necessity and the wisdom of this amendment, except that this morning I proposed a single amendment to increase the area of the land, and I was proceeding to state why I had proposed the amendment, having in my original amendment, which was reported favorably by the committee, fixed the area at 40 acres. There have come to Washington some influential and intelligent Indians from this tribe, who are very well advised of their legal rights and of the treaties, and they have asked that this area be increased to 80 acres.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, I yield.

Mr. JONES. I should like to understand the Senator's position. Does the Senator desire that the 80-acre provision shall apply to all the reservations of the country?

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

Mr. JONES. Just to this one?

Mr. HEYBURN. Just to this one.

Mr. JONES. Then it would seem to me that it would not be proper to change the word "forty," in line 24, to "eighty," because that applies to all the reservations of the country.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but it carries with it the suggested amendment of the Senator from Montana, which limits it.

Mr. JONES. That would be all right.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Idaho will withdraw his amendment striking out "forty" and inserting "eighty," allowing a 40-acre limitation to extend generally over the country, I will then suggest this amendment, which the Senator himself may offer:

Provided, That the 40-acre limitation herein contained shall not apply to lands heretofore embraced in the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in the State of Idaho.

That will leave the treaty to determine.

Mr. HEYBURN. You had better say "not more than 80 acres." I think you had better limit it to not more than 80 acres.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DIXON. If the Senator from Idaho means by his amendment to limit this purely to the Fort Hall Reservation——

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DIXON. I would not offer my objection to what he believes to be the interest of the white people and of the Indians in his own State, but I want to say to the Senator, in confirmation of what was said by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], that the whole policy is to restrict the irrigable areas to the Indian allottees in the State of Montana. My own uniform experience is that when you allot an Indian family, say, 80 acres of irrigable land, a man and his wife and four children get 480 acres of irrigable lands, which it is utterly impossible for those Indians to handle.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let me make this suggestion to the Senator: The bill providing for this allotment is the whole proposition for the life of all of the Indian family and their successors. You see, these families multiply as the years go on, and what is 480 acres for, say, 4 or 5 people to-day, will be 480 acres for 30 or 40 or 50 people in a few years. We have to bear that in mind also. We shut off their future; that is, we give them no future in the acquisition of land. They are limited against the sale of this land for twenty-five years. They are not out in the open world to take advantage of the move of prosperity and changed conditions at all, so that it is not as inequitable as it might seem on its face.

Mr. DIXON. But, if the Senator will pardon me, if that is the condition which prevails among the Idaho Indians as to their rapid increase of population, it is in direct opposition to the experience everywhere else. I do not believe there is an Indian tribe in the United States that is really increasing in numbers. This will result inevitably in great areas of these irrigated lands going into white tenantry. In my own State, in this same bill, we are permitting the Indian, where he has been allotted 80 acres of irrigable lands, which to the Indian himself is a burden, to sell 60 of the 80 acres; and if in a fruit country, 20 acres at the outside of irrigable lands is all a white man can handle.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is the Senator from Montana losing sight of the contract by which the Government gained that vast area of land which belonged to those Indians? Are we not to keep our contract with them?

Mr. DIXON. The pending bill does not reduce the amount of the allotment to the Indian, but merely reduces the irrigable part of the allotment. I think the Senator from Idaho is laboring under a misapprehension. The bill itself does not cut down the allotment which the Government agreed to give the Indian, but it does reduce the irrigable portion of that allotment. I think, without proffering the Senator from Idaho any advice as to affairs in his own State, he certainly will think that the demands and the interest of the Indian in the white communities are wholly adverse to placing in the hands of the Indians these great areas of irrigable lands, which must result in white tenantry, which is a thing not to be thought of.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, upon the suggestions that have been made, and especially those made by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], I will offer the amendment which I send to the desk in lieu of the amendment to strike out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho withdraws his former amendment, and offers an amendment, which will now be read, to be inserted in the committee amendment.

Mr. CARTER. To be inserted in line 1, page 7, after the word "Indian."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, on page 7, line 1, after the word "Indian," to insert:

Provided, That not to exceed 80 acres of such land may be allotted to any Indian entitled to an allotment or allowance now or heretofore embraced within the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, there is no objection to the amendment on the part of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 7, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to relieve distress among Indians and to provide for their care and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including the purchase of vaccine and expense of vaccination, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "four," so as to make the clause read:

For construction, lease, purchase, and repair of school buildings, and for sewerage, water supply, lighting plants, and purchase of school sites and improvements of buildings and grounds, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 13, to insert:

All moneys appropriated herein or hereafter for school purposes among the Indians shall be expended, without restriction as to per capita expenditure for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any school, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and subject to such regulations as to the conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as he may from time to time prescribe, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. CLAPP], to explain precisely the meaning of that amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. The meaning of that amendment, Mr. President, is this: While the appropriations for various schools, as we find them later in the bill, remain the same, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs felt that in some localities it would be better and that he could get better results possibly if the restriction as to the number of pupils was removed, giving him some latitude with reference to those schools, where perhaps it would cost more in one case than in another.

I will say in that connection that it has been somewhat the policy of the Committee on Indian Affairs—not in a very marked degree, but to some extent within the limits of appropriation and general authority—to somewhat enlarge the authority of the commissioner as to details.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under existing law, then, I assume, the expenditure made is upon a per capita basis without any reference to the peculiar situation of the school?

Mr. CLAPP. Without any reference to that whatever. It is simply a hard-and-fast rule. We leave the appropriation the same, but allow a little latitude with reference to the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the discretion of the commissioner?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and of course ultimately with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ultimately, of course, with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LODGE. What is the practical effect? Is it to increase the number of pupils at certain schools and to diminish the number at others?

Mr. CLAPP. The commissioner thinks that in some cases he can increase the number and that possibly in some cases he would have to decrease their number.

Mr. LODGE. These are public schools?

Mr. CLAPP. They are Indian schools—nonreservation schools. The committee felt, as I said, generally, to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that within some little latitude it is better to make the law somewhat more elastic for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, leaving him still within limitations as to appropriations. We found, on his own recommendation, that in one item he was satisfied to have the appropriation reduced $50,000 against that of last year, if we would leave him more latitude with reference to transferring employees and employment. To some extent we have done that in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does it increase the appropriation?

Mr. CLAPP. Not at all. It does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is all right, then.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I had hoped to see in this bill some provision proposing a change in the system of the Indian schools. On recurring occasions when the Indian bill was under consideration I have suggested such a change, and it has been frequently discussed through communications from the department. Coming in contact, as I have for a great many years, with the Indian schools and Indians, I have had an opportunity to observe the effect of the appropriations which Congress makes for maintaining Indian schools, and I have urged that we substitute for these expensive, marble palaces, in which no Indian ever felt comfortable, the little red schoolhouse—the country school. The Government ought to endeavor to make whatever education it gives the Indian beneficial to the entire family or tribe.

Now, you take the Indian child away from his home and surroundings and character of life that it has only known and transfer it into a world that is as new to it as this world was to Adam. The Indian child immediately begins to adapt himself to this new world and these new conditions; and if he is kept away from his tribe and his people three or four years, he comes back generally pretty well equipped with an education along what are termed "civilized lines," but in the meantime the other members of the family who have remained at home have derived no benefit from the education of that Indian child. If the Indian children went every morning to a little neighborhood school and were taught there the appropriate subjects that would tend to equip them for daily life as well as for the future, they would carry home every night, boy and girl, from that day school to the tepee the things that they had learned during the day, whether they might be industrial or along other lines, and they would talk them over. The parents would take an interest in what the child was learning, and every day when the child would relate its little experiences of the day at school, "we were taught so and so, and the teacher said so and so," the whole family would benefit by it. I hope to see the time when the Government will realize that the education of the Indian should be so conducted and applied as to be beneficial to all the Indians in the family all the time.

We have in our State an Indian school that cost a great many thousand dollars. It is a superb thing. The Indians go there and stay there and the family forget them and they forget the family; that is, so far as the daily life is concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are they domiciled there?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; they are domiciled in the school to which I am referring, and there is a very large class of them. The parents and the children do not see each other until the scholar goes home with a tailor-made suit and all the ordinary attributes of a citizen, speaking a language without difficulty that the parent does not understand, and having almost forgotten his own language—the boy or the girl, as the case may be. The folks at home feel sort of resentful against this dude that has come back to them. There is within the sound of my voice and under my eye in the gallery now some educated Indians who understand thoroughly the relation between the Government and the Indian tribes, who understand this treaty and the laws we are discussing just as well as any man on this floor. They are to be given credit for it. They were good students; they speak as good, as accurate, and as correct English as any man on this floor. What do you think of the situation when they go back to the tribe, none of the members of which have for four or five or six years come in contact with them and who can not do any of the things that they can do, and the students have forgotten how to do all the things that the tribe at home did? There is the situation. That can be obviated readily by making the schools day schools, and at a very much decreased expense. I have been advocating this in private and public life for a great many years.

I was thrown with the Indians a great deal some thirty years ago, and since that time have been constantly in contact with them. I know something of them, and I have watched the change in the character of the Indians since they became farmers and took their lands in severalty; and every day of that time I have been impressed with the desirability of bringing education closer to the Indian family. The few of them that want higher education will get it. These Indians are not poor. The tribe of Indians in our State, I think, is second in point of wealth per capita of all communities in the United States—red, white, or any other color. They are not savages and never were—that is, so far as we know—but they still speak the tribal language and they still maintain their traditions and take pride in them and in the history of their ancestors. If they should send their children to school every day, to return home every night, they would derive some benefit from the education that is paid for by the Government.

I merely make this suggestion at this time. I intend to make it each succeeding year, in the hope that it may some day reach the heart of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is due to the Senator from Idaho to say that not only the committee but the department recognize the force of his argument, and we have taken additional steps here to enlarge and strengthen the reservation schools. The department is gradually placing a higher limit of age upon those who may leave the reservation and attend non-reservation schools. It is one of those questions where there is a sort of debatable ground between two extremes. Both the department and the committees in both Houses are gradually moving in the direction of enlarging the work along the line suggested by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I do not want to sit here and let the discussion go along as if there were but one side to this question. I know the view the department has taken; and, of course, we all know that from year to year, almost with every commissioner, the department has changed its view as to the best method of educating the Indian. I surmise that the most harm has been done the Indians, not through any particular system, but by rather an unsteadiness of plan or system. It is not a one-sided question. There is a good deal in what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has said; and I think as soon as it is possible on every Indian reservation the reservation school should be established.

Within a year I have been in one of the reservation schools, and talked with the teachers in that school with reference to the difficulties they meet and the problems they have to solve. If things could go on as nicely as the Senator suggests, all would be well and good, but I suspect that in his town they need a truant officer to keep even the white children in school with the regularity that they should be kept therein. They do in most towns, and if they do not in the Senator's town, that is an exception.

Mr. HEYBURN. They do not.

Mr. BURKETT. As I have said, they do in most towns. They have a school officer, whose duty it is to see that the students are kept in school with regularity.

One of the questions that the teacher in the reservation school has to contend with is in getting the students to attend. When they go home at night they are out of the teacher's control until they come back the next morning, and they do not come back with any very great regularity, the teacher told me. Secondly, the teachers are not in the control of what the pupils do from the time they leave in the evening until they come back the next morning any more so than is the case with white pupils. The teachers do not know where the pupils spend their evenings or how much of their time is given to sleep, and, in a good many instances, when they come back the next day they are not in very good condition to do very much study, and, in some cases, they have lost, also, the effects of the good teaching they had in school the day before by some different character of teaching during the time spent at home.

That may not be so with the Indians to whom the Senator from Idaho refers; that is not true as to some of the tribes in my State, I will say to the Senator from Idaho; but those are the problems the teachers have to meet in the reservation schools.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think those problems are not of frequent occurrence. The reservations I have in mind—and I have known and know now some of them—have no slums and no saloons or billiard halls. They have none of those things that would be included in the suggestion of the Senator that would make it difficult for the teacher to keep track of them between the hours of school. The best feature of it is that the teacher is dissociated from them outside of school hours, and that they associate with their families. That is one of the very best features, because that is the period during which the little student, who may be a pigmy among students, and yet a giant among the uneducated members of the family, is spreading the pollen of the day.

I do not think there is anything in the proposition that the teacher should have supervision or control over the pupils out of school. I think it is better, I repeat, that during that time they should come in contact with the other members of the tribe or family, as the case may be, in order to do what good they may.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, it is in their favor, I will say, that they do not have many of the modern vices in Indian communities that the white children have to meet when they go out of school at the close of day; yet we know that there are a great many private schools for white children maintained so as to keep them under the influence of the school all the time, on the theory that that is better than to let them roam where there are not proper restraints or where the surroundings are not desirable. There are a good many white people who prefer to take their children right from their infancy and send them off to private schools, where they are kept in institutions all the time.

I am not going to combat with the Senator from Idaho, because I am not an Indian educator, qualified to have a judgment that would be worth anything upon this question; but I did not want the Senator's arraignment of these schools to go entirely unanswered or without any manner of protest.

There is a contention between those who are educating Indians as to which is the better method. We have tried both ways, and we are trying both ways to-day, without, I think, any well-settled view as to which is the better way. There are arguments both ways.

Mr. HEYBURN. Right there, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a fearful indictment the Senator makes against the white civilization in the home that they must send their children away from home in order that they may not be subjected to vicious surroundings and dangerous conditions of life. That is a very serious thing.

Mr. BURKETT. Does not the Senator have under his observation any children who are sent away because the surroundings and advantages where they happen to be located are not at all times satisfactory to their parents and they think the children would be better off in private schools?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would have to animadvert with such harshness upon the conditions that such parents surround their children with that I would rather not undertake to enumerate them.

Mr. BURKETT. The parents can not always control the conditions and the surroundings.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have known of people who are desirous of shirking every bit of responsibility and trouble in connection with the proper rearing and education of their children, but I am very thankful that they are not very numerous.

I have had some occasion to observe the moral conditions that surround the Indian tribes in their home life; and I am very free to say that there are no people on earth—and I bar no nation—where the surroundings and the home life of the children are as free from objectionable features and as clean and pure as in the Indian tribes. At one time, many years ago, I had occasion to be with a tribe of Indians that numbered over 10,000. I say that because the census was taken about that time. I was there; and in that whole tribe there was but one immoral woman, and she was the victim of an officer of the army, many years dead. You can not say that for any other equal number of white people on this earth, and it was because of the principles that they bred in their children. There was no trouble about larceny or the ordinary violations of the good order of society among those people, and the same might be said of many tribes with which I have been familiar.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I hope there is nothing in what I have said that may be construed as an indictment of the morals of the Indians. I have not had as much experience with the Indians, perhaps, as the Senator has, or as much knowledge in general, perhaps, of Indian reservations. However, I have been on a good many of them, and I undertake to say that there is not an Indian reservation in the United States but that the difficulties are greater in sending children to local schools than they are in localities where white people are settled. For example, the distances are greater; the communities are not so thickly settled, and it is more difficult for the children to get to school. The distance must be longer to the schoolhouse where you could get together enough pupils to have a school that would be of any particular consequence. The Indian parent has not been to school and, as the Senator has suggested, in many instances he does not appreciate the value of schools. This is no reflection upon them, because there are numbers of white people who do not appreciate the value of schools. That is one of the reasons why we have to have truant officers in almost every community to get the children to school. We have to pass laws requiring them to go to school, even among the white people. As I have said, those things are against the utility of the school on the reservation.

I would say to the Senator from Idaho that I am very much in favor of reservation schools; in fact, I urged the department two or three years ago to establish one particular reservation school, because I thought the Indians on that reservation could use one and would use one and would support it and would see that their children would attend it, and they have done so.

I will say to the Senator that, in the main, they have done exceedingly well; perhaps better in general than anyone had a right to expect. But all the reservations are not the same as that reservation; all the Indians are not the same as those Indians. Some of the tribes are small, and there are only a few Indians in comparison with the number of acres they have. It is better to collect these children all together somewhere and form a good school than to establish several small schools with not enough pupils in any one of them to make the school interesting or practical. You can not make the same rule for all reservations or for all Indians. I think there is where the department made its error, in switching from one extreme back to the other extreme as the years have gone by, and we have lost out on it. I did not want what the Senator said here to go unchallenged, as though there were no other or different idea in the country. I did not want the department to understand that what the Senator said was universally approved by the educators of the country. I want to see the local schools established just as rapidly as they can be. I want the schools brought as close to the Indian as possible and made as practicable for his uses as may be. I have not any manner of doubt as to the wisdom of that. But I do believe that it is impossible and impracticable and unwise to undertake at this time to abolish all the nonreservation schools simply because they are nonreservation schools.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not be understood as favoring the abolishment of these schools. I am in favor of directing the Treasury of the United States to come to the assistance of the others first; that is to say, the common schools. The civilization of this country rests largely upon common-school education. It has been the foundation of all the education and attainments of the people of the country.

It is only fair to say that the tribe of Indians to whom I referred were the Ogallalla Sioux. Fight! There is no other tribe of Indians that ever did so fight. But they were a virtuous tribe of Indians—those Ogallalla Sioux. They have now taken their land in severalty. I am speaking of them as of thirty years ago. More than twenty years ago, I attended the commencement exercises of the Coeur d'Alene Indians. They were making a treaty with the Indians, and I was representing one side of the controversy. I came in contact with them for days, attended their commencement exercises, and saw those Indians, who ten or fifteen years before had scarcely known there was a written language, equipped so that they made as creditable an appearance in all of the exercises as an equal number of white children.

I want to see that go on, and it will go on best through the public-school system.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to express an idea here which is somewhat intermediate between those of the two Senators who have already expressed themselves upon the subject. I do not agree with the Senator from Idaho that we are getting any better results from our day schools, from our reservation schools, than we are getting out of some of the other schools. As has already been suggested, the Indian scholar is not one who, as a rule, likes to attend school. He does not, as a rule, attend school when he can escape it. I am speaking now, generally, of those upon the reservations. We have to take into consideration the character of those Indians, the character of the training they have had for thousands of years, when we attempt to apply any particular rule to them, and that character of training has been such as is not conducive toward school attendance day after day and remaining for several hours in a schoolroom.

We get better results, therefore, during certain ages at least, outside of the reservation school, provided—and here comes the great difficulty that we have constantly to confront—that we do not send them so far away from home that they are totally without connection with their own people, and in another world, surrounded by conditions in no wise related to those they will be forced into again when they return home.

This leads me to the single proposition that I think is more harmful in the outside schools than any other, and that is the cultivation of what is called the "college spirit," which, in common parlance, means the "sporting spirit." We will take some of our principal nonreservation schools. The principal idea infused into the Indian is not so much how to become a good American citizen, how to benefit himself when he gets back to the reservation, as it is that his school should be superior in football or other athletic games, whether he will become a talented musician or a successful business or trades man. If we can simply get it into the heads of those who are controlling the outside schools that the schools are for the benefit of the Indians after they get back to the reservation, rather than to promote the athletic credit of the school, I think we will have taken a long step toward the betterment of the affairs of the Indian.

We have some very good Indian football players in the colleges around here, but they are no more good when they get back to the reservation than the white football player who gives more time to the game than to study when he gets back among the people where he has to make his own living. The Indian who goes to Carlisle may become a very good musician; he may blow very well upon any kind of a brass horn, but that brass horn will not blow the potatoes out of the ground, where, when he gets back to his reservation, he has to get them out of the ground. And the cultivation of that talent does not especially fit him for the character of work he will have to do after he gets back to the reservation. What is the result?

The result is that he gets disheartened in a very short time. The result is that he has not at the schools built up a character for industry, but rather an inclination for sport. I want to protest here against that sort of education.

If, on the other hand, we can conduct our schools, though they may be off the reservation, but within a reasonable distance, from which the children can go home and see their parents and their parents can see them, but where they will be kept in school, treated well, boarded well, and cared for well, I think we will get a good deal of benefit, provided we do not attempt to cultivate, as I have said, what they call the "college spirit" in every one of these little outside colleges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

And provided further, That the act of February 23, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 687), entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi Reservation, in Idaho, May 14, 1880, and for other purposes," be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking out section 2 thereof and substituting the following:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be surveyed the lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, Idaho, and upon the completion of said survey he shall cause the irrigable lands on said reservation to be allotted to the Indians entitled thereto in such areas as he may deem advisable, not to exceed 40 acres to any one Indian, however; and in addition to the allotment of irrigable land there shall be allotted to each Indian entitled 160 acres of grazing land, and the said Secretary is hereby authorized to set aside and reserve certain lands in the western part of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, lying between the Snake River and the Port Neuf River, in ranges 32 and 33 east of the Boise meridian, known as the 'Fort Hall Bottoms,' for the use of the Fort Hall Indians for grazing purposes."

Mr. HEYBURN. I move, on page 20, to strike out line 5 down to the word "and" where it first appears in line 23 and to substitute therefor what I will read. I will give the reason for the amendment to the amendment. I move to substitute the following:

Provided, That it shall be optional with those Indians entitled to allotments on the Fort Hall Reservation whether they accept a portion of their allotment within the irrigated portion of the reservation, as provided in this act, or shall avail themselves of the provisions of the act of February 23, 1889, entitled "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and the Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi Reservation in Idaho, May 14, 1880, and for other purposes."

It so happens that a number——

Mr. CLAPP. Unless the Senator from Idaho desires to discuss the amendment, the committee will accept it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely want the RECORD to show in a few words the reason.

A number of Indians, with their families, have for many years resided upon streams outside of the irrigated area that afford sufficient water for their purposes, and they have builded homes there. They do not desire to be disturbed or care to take advantage of the provisions of this act; and the amendment merely gives them the option of staying there or going onto the irrigated portion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 21, after line 3, to insert as a subhead:

Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "for drainage, $10,000;" and in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-seven" and insert "fifty-seven," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 8. For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., for transportation of pupils to and from said school, and for pay of superintendent, $137,750; for drainage, $10,000; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; in all, $157,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 22, to insert as a subhead:

Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, on page 22, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "six;" in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "seven;" and in the same line, before the word "thousand," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "fifty-eight" and insert "sixty-four," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 9. For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., and for pay of superintendent, $51,800; for new office building, $6,000; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; in all, $64,800.

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish the chairman in charge of the bill would have the kindness to explain what is meant by "striking out and inserting." Is it so many thousands or so many hundreds, or what?

Mr. CLAPP. The bill, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. SHIVELY. I have not been following the bill closely.

Mr. CLAPP. It raises the appropriation, in line 1, for a new office building from $3,000 to $6,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. What page?

Mr. CLAPP. Page 22. Then, in line 7, it raises the appropriation for repairs and improvements from $4,000 to $7,000, making a total of $64,000 instead of $58,000. The Senator will find it at the top of page 22.

Mr. SHIVELY. Page 22? What line?

Mr. CLAPP. Lines 1 to 4.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Clerk may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 22, after line 4, to insert as a subhead:

Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, on page 22, after line 15, to strike out:

For advance interest to the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, as required by section 7, act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," to be expended in the manner required by said act, $90,000: Provided, That the amount of this appropriation and all moneys heretofore or hereafter to be appropriated for this purpose shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States in accordance with the provisions of the act of January 14, 1889: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1910, a statement, by tribes and funds, of all moneys appropriated by Congress since July 1, 1875, required by law to be reimbursed to the United States from Indian tribal funds held in trust or otherwise, showing the extent to which such reimbursements have been or may now be accomplished.

For the relief and civilization of the Chippewas in Minnesota, to be expended as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, $150,000, to be paid from tribal funds held in trust or otherwise by the United States for the Chippewas in Minnesota.

And insert:

Advance interest to the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, as required by section 7 of "An act for the relief of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the manner required by said act (reimbursable), $90,000.

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to carry out an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, namely, the purchase of material and employment of labor for the erection of houses for Indians; for the purchase of agricultural implements, stock, and seeds, breaking and fencing land; for payment of expenses of delegations of Chippewa Indians to visit the White Earth Reservation; for the erection and maintenance of day and industrial schools; for subsistence and for pay of employees; for pay of commissioners and their expenses, and for removal of Indians and for their allotments, to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of sale of their lands, $150,000.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to advance to the executive committee of the White Earth band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the annual celebration of said band to be held June 14, 1910, out of the funds belonging to said band.

That two years' additional time for paying the installments due or to become due is hereby given to the purchasers of homestead lands sold pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota," approved February 20, 1904; and no homestead entries under said act shall be canceled for nonpayment of installments of the purchase price until the expiration of the two additional years above named.

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish the Senator in charge of the bill would explain this item.

Mr. CLAPP. In 1889 the Government made a treaty, which was subsequently formulated into legislation, with the Chippewa Indians by which we advanced them $90,000 of interest annually, and then we appropriated out of the fund $150,000, making $240,000. On pages 22 and 23 the House inserted those items, but they had changed the language of the former bill, and to bring the bill within the language of the former bill and language which has been employed now for a great many years, the committee struck out the House provision and inserted the Senate amendment. They do not change the amount. The Senator will observe on page 23, commencing with line 15, the provision for advance interest, $90,000; and then, in line 22, page 23, is the provision for taking out $150,000 pursuant to a law which was passed in 1889, by which the Government takes and sells the timber and puts it into a fund. The estimated amount was fixed so that the interest agreed to, at the rate of $90,000 a year, should be paid.

Mr. SHIVELY. The act of 1889 was the organic act that formed the basis for this legislation?

Mr. CLAPP. It was the basic act rather than the organic act.

Mr. SHIVELY. It formed the basis for this appropriation?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 4, to insert as a subhead:

Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 23, on page 25.

Mr. SHIVELY. If the Senator from Minnesota will permit me to trouble him a moment. I admit that I am not familiar with the terms of the Indian appropriation bills in recent years. But take the item beginning in line 11:

For support and civilization of Indians at Flathead Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $9,000.

Is that the usual language employed in these appropriation bills?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; it is the language that has been employed for a great many years.

Mr. SHIVELY. And what does it cover?

Mr. CLAPP. It covers the expense of maintaining the agency, including the pay of the agent. I ought to be a little more accurate. Heretofore, down to within a year or two, we always specified the amount which the agent would receive; but two or three years ago we began changing it, and now the change has become uniform, and agents have given way to what we call "superintendents." With that exception the item is one of long standing in all these bills. The Senator will observe, for instance, on page 31:

For support and civilization of the Indians of the Western Shoshone Agency, Nev., including pay of employees, $8,000.

And in several places, when we reach the different States, a similar provision will be found.

Mr. SHIVELY. This includes only the support and pay of employees; that is, the salaries of the agents and employees engaged at the different agencies?

Mr. CLAPP. At this agency perhaps it would include the expense of the teachers at the day school. There are day schools at nearly all the agencies.

Mr. SHIVELY. Suppose we take the item on page 25, beginning at line 6:

For the support and civilization of the Indians at Fort Belknap Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $20,000.

Just what does that item of $20,000 cover?

Mr. CLAPP. I could not state to the Senator just what it covers, for this reason: This is the House bill we are dealing with, and where we do not propose to amend the text of the bill we accept it. Consequently in such a case the chairman of the committee would hardly be expected to analyze the item. But in a general way it covers the salary of the superintendent, the subsistence of the superintendent, the salaries of the teachers and the clerks at the agency. They have sometimes one and sometimes four clerks, according to the necessities of the case.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let me ask right there, all of which is in the discretion of the Indian Department?

Mr. CLAPP. The sum total. I explained some time ago that formerly, for instance, we fixed the salary of an agent perhaps at one agency at $1,800 and at another agency at $2,000, but beginning some years ago we gradually eliminated the agents and allowed the Indian commissioner to substitute a superintendent, and we also more or less and a little more every year withdraw the limitations upon the commissioner as to details, simply placing a limitation upon the appropriation. That enables him, if a superintendent is a very superior one, to pay the superintendent a little more and the teachers perhaps a little less, or the teachers a little more and the superintendent a little less. We are gradually, not rapidly at all, but in a measure, enlarging his jurisdiction within the limitations which we fix.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is, you enlarge the discretion of the Indian Department in the payment of this sum as between the superintendent and those who are under him?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and those under him.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does it increase the sum in any manner?

Mr. CLAPP. It does not increase the sum at all. It is a very wise provision. It is just the same provision that a man would apply to his own business.

Mr. SHIVELY. Always provided you have a wise man at the head of the Indian service.

Mr. CLAPP. Exactly; and that human equation is necessarily involved in all matters. I must say, while it is not perhaps germane to the discussion, that the present commissioner is devoting himself with a great deal of earnestness and a great deal of ability to the personal-equation phase of the Indian subject-matter, which, after all, is so largely involved in the administration of Indian affairs.

Mr. SHIVELY. I was only curious in regard to this matter for the reason that some years ago I had a little experience and had occasion to observe the conduct of the Indian Department. In my humble judgment, I did not always find the department wise in this matter in a good many respects.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section [9] 11, on page 27, after line 15, to insert:

That the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana," and all amendments thereto, be amended by adding thereto the following sections:

"SEC. 23. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to immediately cause to be surveyed and subdivided into lots, not less than 2 acres and not more than 5 acres in area, all of the unallotted lands fronting on Flathead Lake, in the State of Montana, that are embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, whether classified as grazing, agricultural, or timber lands.

"That when said lands are so surveyed and subdivided into lots as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall sell the same to the highest bidder, either at public sale or under sealed bids, as in his judgment he shall deem best for the interest of the confederated tribes of the Flathead, Kootenai, and Upper Pend d'Oreille Indians, the proceeds from the sale of said lands, after deducting the expenses of the survey and sale of the lands, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and expended as heretofore provided in section 14, as amended by the act of May 29, 1908.

"SEC. 24. That where allotments of lands have been made in severalty to said Indians from the lands embraced within the area of said Flathead Indian Reservation, which are or may be irrigable lands, the Secretary of the Interior may, upon application of the Indian allottee, sell and dispose of not to exceed 60 acres of such individual allotment of land under such terms and conditions of sale as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, one-half of the proceeds of the sale of said individual allotment to be paid to the Indian allottee and the remaining half of the proceeds of sale to be held in trust for the said Indian allottee, upon which he shall be paid annually not less than 3 per cent interest, the remaining principal sum to be paid to said allottee or his heirs when the full period of his trust patent for the remaining lands covered by his allotment shall have expired, or sooner, should the Secretary of the Interior, in his judgment, deem it best for said Indian allottee.

"SEC. 25. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set aside and reserve so much of the surplus unallotted and otherwise unreserved lands of the Flathead Indian Reservation as may be necessary to provide an allotment to each Indian having an allotment on any of the lands set aside and reserved for power or reservoir sites, as authorized by section 22 of the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 796), who may relinquish his allotment within such power or reservoir sites.

"And in the event of the failure, neglect, or refusal of any such allottee to relinquish any allotment made to him on any land reserved or necessary for reservoir sites, as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to bring action under the provision of the laws of the State of Montana to condemn and acquire title to any and all lands necessary or useful for said reservoir sites that have heretofore been allotted on said Flathead Indian Reservation lands."

Mr. DIXON. On line 1, page 29, I move to strike out "three" and insert "four" before the words "per centum," so as to read:

Not less than 4 per cent interest.

Mr. CLAPP. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6737) to create a court of commerce and to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs as amended.

Mr. SHIVELY. Some days ago we passed a bill here authorizing the issue of $30,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness for the purpose of carrying forward the irrigation projects. I observe that on page 26 there is appropriated $250,000, $100,000 of which shall be immediately available, and in line 15 there is another appropriation of $200,000, and thereafter a series of appropriations of different sums. What relation do these appropriations of public moneys bear to the appropriation of public moneys for the general Reclamation Service?

Mr. CLAPP. They bear no relation whatever. There is a general Reclamation Service which is entirely distinct from this service. But within the Indian reservations, instead of throwing these matters into the general Reclamation Service, the policy has been to conduct them under the direction of the Indian Office, and, I think, very wisely. I think we get better results, because in the case of the Indian Office reclamation is not a primary object; the general benefit to the Indian is the primary object. They can employ Indians not to the advantage of the fund particularly, but to the advantage of the Indian, when, if it was being conducted under the general Reclamation Service, that service would not feel warranted in putting up with the delay, perhaps, and slow work and patience essential to get Indians to do work that is not Indian work. The committee, I think, very generally, from observation made last summer in the field, are satisfied that we get better results in the Indian reservations by allowing that work to be done by the Indian Office.

Mr. SHIVELY. If the Senator pleases, does it not frequently happen that these so-called "projects" extended by the Reclamation Service, are projected into the Indian reservations and connected with them?

Mr. CLAPP. There are some such cases, and where such cases arise the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make proper regulations for the Indian land to be irrigated and disposed of under the law.

Mr. SHIVELY. The point I was trying to make was that all these appropriations for irrigation purposes are in addition to any appropriations that we have made in other bills for the Reclamation Service.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; entirely outside.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 30, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain what citizens, if any, of the Muskogee or Creek tribe of Indians made selections of land the appraised value of which was in excess of the standard value of $1,040. In case he finds that such selections were made in excess of such standard he shall report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby authorized to place to the credit of said Muskogee or Creek tribe of Indians the total amount of the excess so found by the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use the existing funds of said tribe of Indians to equalize allotments, giving to each his pro rata share according to certificates of indebtedness due them for equalization of allotments.

Mr. KEAN. I should like the Senator to explain that amendment, if he will.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this amendment is offered as a substitute for an amendment which was presented in the committee. The proposition was to require the Government to equalize all the allotments of the Creek tribe of Indians up to $1,040 which would have taken over $2,000,000. It was developed on the hearing that about 800 allotments had been made of tracts of land which exceeded the standard of allotment, which in the agreement was fixed at $1,040. As a compromise this proposition was inserted, so that the money now in the Treasury to the credit of the Creek Indians, together with what few dollars may be placed there by the Government in lieu of the excess allotments to about 800, may be used to equalize allotments between the members of the Creek tribe of Indians.

Mr. KEAN. What is the amount involved?

Mr. CURTIS. Under the terms of the amendment it will not be very much. I am advised only a few thousand dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 2 on page 44.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the consent of the committee to have inserted at this point the following amendment:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby instructed to pay from the funds of the Chickasaw Nation the sum of $1,368 to St. Agnes Academy, of Ardmore, Okla., for board and tuition of Chickasaw children.

Mr. CLAPP. The committee has no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate's order was that committee amendments should first be acted on; but, if there be no objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will be received at this time. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby instructed to pay from the funds of the Chickasaw Nation the sum of $1,368 to St. Agnes Academy, of Ardmore, Okla., for board and tuition of Chickasaw children.

Mr. OWEN. I am informed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that he has made a favorable report upon this proposition, though his recommendation has not yet reached the committee.

Mr. KEAN. Ought not the word in the Senator's amendment be "authorized" instead of "instructed?"

Mr. OWEN. Yes. I accept the suggestion of the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be modified by inserting the word "authorized" instead of "instructed," if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that I think he desires to offer an amendment at this point in the bill.

The court shall determine the compensation of such commissioner, which, with the expenses of taking such testimony, shall be paid out of the funds of the Menominee Indian tribe. In event that judgment shall be rendered against individual members of the tribe, the expense incurred hereunder shall be paid out of the funds of the individuals against whom said judgments are rendered, and the Menominee tribal fund shall be reimbursed with the amounts so charged against individual members of the tribe. In the event that the plaintiffs in the suits shall fail to establish their claims the said plaintiffs shall bear the cost of employing such commissioner and the expense of taking such testimony.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin what is the amount of money involved in that provision?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The very purpose of the suit is to determine the amount of money involved.

Mr. KEAN. About how much?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not remember. The bill was passed a year or two ago. The original act authorized a suit to be brought. This is simply to expedite the hearings in taking the testimony through a commissioner.

Mr. KEAN. Through a commissioner?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 56, after line 17, to insert:

Any suits filed under this act shall be against the Menominee tribe of Indians, and said claims shall be presented to said court by verified petitions to be filed within one year from the date of the approval of this act. Copy of said petition shall be served upon the Attorney-General of the United States and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The Attorney-General shall appear and defend any suit brought hereunder. In the event that any judgment is rendered hereunder, it shall be paid out of the logging fund of the said Menominee tribe of Indians: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may settle any of the said claims and pay the same as herein authorized, provided that agreements of settlement can be reached between the said contractors and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at any time previous to the filing of said suits or during the pendency thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 18, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to place on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the 457 members of the Wisconsin band of Pottawatomie Indians, who reside in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, as set forth in the enrollment made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $447,339, being the proportionate share of said Indians in annuities and tribal moneys in which they have not heretofore shared, as set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Interior contained in House Document No. 830, Sixtieth Congress. From the sum credited to said Pottawatomie Indians there is hereby appropriated the sum of $5,000, to be paid to R. V. Belt, an attorney of Washington, D. C., in full settlement of all claims of said Belt and associates for services performed in behalf of said Indians; and there be, and hereby is, appropriated to Rev. Erik O. Morstad, of Carter, Wis., the sum of $5,000 for supplies furnished and services rendered said Indians; and the balance of said amount credited to said Indians shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which interest shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the industrial education and necessities of such Indians.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment by striking out, in line 6, on page 58, beginning with the words "From the sum" down to the word "Indians," in line 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 6, after the word "Congress," it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the following words:

From the sum credited to said Pottawatomie Indians there is hereby appropriated the sum of $5,000, to be paid to R. V. Belt, an attorney of Washington, D. C., in full settlement of all claims of said Belt and associates for services performed in behalf of said Indians.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma the purpose of striking that out?

Mr. OWEN. The purpose, Mr. President, is that R. V. Belt, under a contract with these Indians in 1902, has prosecuted this claim ever since that time. I think the record abundantly shows that they would not have recovered at all except for his services. This fee is fixed for him without his having had any hearing of any proper kind. He protests against the fixing of this fee in this manner. He desires permission to go to the court or to go to some proper tribunal, where he may present the reasons justifying an allowance to him of a larger fee, and I think he ought to have that privilege. I do not think it is advisable to take up the time of the Senate in discussing the details here. I think it would be easy for the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is concerned in it and who thinks that the fee is abundantly large, to present the details to the conferees when they meet and have it determined.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, that was the reason I made the inquiry. Will it not be better to leave the item as it is? I understand that a statement is being prepared, with the idea, possibly, that in conference that item might be sent to the Court of Claims. It occurs to me that it would be better to leave the item in the bill, and it would then be a subject of conference.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw the proposed amendment to the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma withdraws the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there has been a great deal of legislation in this bill to which I have not objected. I presume it is, for the most part, beneficent legislation, but here is a provision that is clearly violative of the rules of the Senate. Not only is it general legislation, but it proposes to pay two claims, which our rules expressly forbid us to do on appropriation bills.

Mr. CLAPP. To what page does the Senator refer?

Mr. GALLINGER. I now refer to page 58, where Mr. Belt is to be paid and the Rev. Erik O. Morstad is to be paid, each of them, apparently, for claims against the Indians or against the Government, I do not know which.

Mr. President, this is a matter that ought to be settled by legislation in the usual way, and not upon an appropriation bill, as is proposed now. I feel constrained, Mr. President, to make a point of order against the amendment on two grounds, first, that it is general legislation, and, second, it proposes to pay claims of people who allege they are entitled to certain compensation.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that these are claims against the Indian funds, and I think they have always been considered a proper matter for the Indian appropriation bill. Both of these claims are against such a fund.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, if that be so, I raise the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is general legislation in contravention of our rules.

Mr. CLAPP. Does that apply to the two claims?

Mr. GALLINGER. It applies to the item, I will say to the Senator, commencing on line 19, page 57, and ending on line 19, page 58.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to suggest to the Senator that this is a matter that has been gone over by the department very thoroughly, and is fully covered in the report. It is not an appropriation directly. It is simply capitalizing the interest of those Indians, and such matters have been very often disposed of in the Indian appropriation bill. In fact, I think that has been the course heretofore almost uniformly in the case of capitalization.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the senior Senator from Wisconsin upon what ground the Government is asked to pay 5 per cent to Wisconsin, whereas we are paying only 4 per cent in the other parts of this bill? Is there an agreement with the Government that it should pay that rate?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the rate of 5 per cent provided for in this amendment against which the point of order has been made is the interest charge which is usually paid on annuity funds by the Government under similar treaty provisions. I do not think any exception is made in this case. The Senator from Minnesota is more familiar with all those cases than I am.

Mr. PAGE. Then I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the reason for the difference between the 4 per cent which has just been voted in a provision relating to Montana and the 5 per cent we are paying to Wisconsin?

Mr. CURTIS. Under the old treaties the 5 per cent was allowed to all the Indian tribes. About eight or ten years ago Congress determined on another policy, and Congress fixed upon 4 per cent. That explains the difference between the allowance of 4 per cent for one and 5 per cent for the other. This item is based upon a treaty made away back in the thirties.

Mr. PAGE. Do you regard 5 per cent as the proper rate in this case?

Mr. CURTIS. If they are entitled to it at all, they are entitled to 5 per cent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not expect to be able to prevail upon the Senator from New Hampshire to withdraw his point of order. However, if he will withhold it for a moment I desire to say that the case of these Indians is one that ought to appeal to the consideration of the Senate. This money has been due them for many years. There are 457 of these Pottawatomie Indians, and nearly all are in a destitute condition. This money is due them under the treaties and the laws. It should be placed to their credit in the Treasury, and they ought to have the interest which the Government pays in all such cases. It is due them, and they should have the benefit of it now. Payment ought to be no longer delayed.

The Secretary of the Interior made a careful investigation and a full report as to what is due these Indians; that report is included in the report which accompanies this bill. He recommends this action.

As this amendment merely makes provision to carry out existing law, I question whether the amendment is strictly amenable to the point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire, but, whether it be or not, it is in conformity with the practice of the Senate. If there ever was a case with the department approval stronger than in this instance, my attention has never been called to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the matter to the Senate. Is the amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senate rules the amendment in order.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, what has been said in regard to this appropriation by the Senator from Wisconsin convinces me that it is all right, and I intend to vote for it, but a question has arisen in my mind, which I have no doubt can be explained, in regard to the Rev. Erik O. Morstad, of Carter, Wis., who is to receive the sum of $5,000 for supplies furnished. New York is a capitalistic State, and the condition of prosperity and capital applies not only to bankers, railroad men, and lawyers, but largely also to the clergy; and yet I do not know a country clergyman in the State of New York who would have a credit in his local store for $5,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator have the kindness to restate that proposition?

Mr. DEPEW. While I have no doubt it is all right, yet I should like to have explained how this condition of prosperity and of wealth exists among the clergy in little rural districts in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This amendment which has been stricken out on the point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. KEAN. Oh, no; it was not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No. The amendment was not stricken out on the point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Chair to——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was submitted to the Senate and held to be in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood it was submitted to the Senate, but that the holding was the reverse of that now stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that point I am going to ask that the question be again submitted, because I did not understand the question before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Chair will again submit the proposition. Does the Senate construe the amendment to be in order?

Mr. CLAY. On what page is the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Beginning with line 19, on page 57, and concluding with line 19, on page 58.

Mr. DEPEW. While I think the objection might lie to other appropriation bills I have been watching, although having little to do with the Indian appropriation bills for a good many years, I think we do invariably pass this kind of legislation on Indian appropriation bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are 40 other items which the Senator overlooked.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senate rules the amendment in order. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to say, before we leave this amendment, in response to the facetious interrogatory of the senior Senator from New York, that if he cares to investigate the matter he will find considerable detailed information in respect to the services of Mr. Morstad in a letter signed by the Secretary of the Interior, found on page 28 of the report accompanying this bill, in which the Secretary states that Mr. Morstad has devoted years of his life to the service of these Indians and recommends the payment of this $5,000 item to him for his services in caring for these Indians and for his work in securing the data upon which this legislation is based.

The same document states that the $5,000 item provided as a full payment for the services of Mr. R. V. Belt, the attorney named, is ample.

The attorneys in this case succeeded in getting from two of the Indians a signed contract which, if it had been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, would have secured for them from these Indians a fee of $67,000. The Secretary of the Interior made a careful investigation of the matter, and has reported that the $5,000 is ample payment for all services they have rendered. That investigation, however, was made under Secretary Garfield. Some complaint having come to me from these attorneys, and in view of what has been said about an attempt to be made to raise this fee when the bill is in conference, I wish to make this further statement: I asked the attorneys who, under the contract disapproved by the Secretary of the Interior, would receive out of the money of these Indians $67,000 as attorneys' fees, to present to me a written statement in full of all the services which they had rendered. They did this, giving me a somewhat voluminous document, which I submitted to the present Secretary of the Interior, and upon which I expected before this hour to receive his finding. I am advised by telephone, however, from the Secretary's office that he has reviewed the whole matter, and approves the finding of Secretary Garfield that a fee of $5,000 is ample for the services rendered by the attorneys in this case.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, regarding the question raised by the Senator from Vermont as to the rate of interest—5 per cent—that these Pottawatomie Indians should receive from the Federal Government for their funds held in the Treasury, I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether or not there is a treaty agreement with these Indians that 5 per cent shall be paid, or is this an amount arbitrarily fixed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not an arbitrary amount. It is an amount, I am advised, which is paid in all cases similar to this. The Government is to-day paying 5 per cent interest on all funds belonging to Indians under agreements similar to the agreements with the Pottawatomie Indians.

Mr. DIXON. Is there a specific agreement in the case of the Pottawatomie Indians that the Government shall pay 5 per cent?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is a specific agreement with respect to their annuities, and under similar agreements the Government, as I am advised, has in all cases paid and is now paying exactly the rate provided for in this amendment.

Mr. DIXON. In a somewhat similar case in the same bill the rate has been fixed at 4 per cent. I did not know whether there was any agreement with the——

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think that was a case of capitalization, Mr. President.

Mr. DIXON. No; it was not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 58, after line 19, to insert as a subhead:

Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [25] 27, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 59, after line 18, to insert:

That the provisions of section 4 of "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, and the acts amendatory thereof, approved June 11, 1896, and March 3, 1901, respectively, be, and are hereby, extended over and shall apply to the desert lands included within the limits of the former Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, in Wyoming, not included in any forest reservation: Provided, That all lands made subject to said act shall be paid at the rate of $1.25 per acre, the first payment of 50 cents per acre to be made at the time of segregation, and the remainder of the purchase price to be paid 25 cents per acre each year thereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 28, on page 60, line 22, after the date "1910," to strike out "and 1911," so as to read:

SEC. 28. As soon after the close of the present fiscal year as may be practicable and not later than the first Monday in December, 1910, the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a statement of the fiscal affairs of all Indian tribes for whose benefit estimates of appropriations, except for the purpose of fulfilling treaty stipulations, to be paid from either public or tribal funds, will be made for the fiscal year 1912; and such statement shall show (1) the total amount of all moneys, except the unexpended balances of appropriations made for current and contingent expenses for Indian affairs for the fiscal years 1910, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 2, to strike out:

The agreement with the Oneida tribe of Wisconsin dated January 4, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 18, to strike out:

The Oneida tribe of Wisconsin, $20,000.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will be directed to renumber the sections in conformity with the amendments which have been made. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 7, line 12, I move to amend by striking out the words "seventy" and inserting "eighty," and after the word "dollars," in the same line, I move to insert:

Ten thousand dollars thereof to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 11, line 2, after the word "Affairs," I move to insert "and procuring historical data." This is an item of $5,000 inserted for the classification of the old files, and they want the additional authority.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 38, at the request of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I offer the amendment I send to the desk. It is to be inserted after line 16.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to enroll and allot James F. Rowell, intermarried in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, who was regularly adopted by the tribal council of aforesaid tribes previous to June 1, 1909.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is this an Indian, or a white man who simply intermarried with an Indian?

Mr. CLAPP. This is an Indian, a mixed blood, but he did not get on to the allotment roll.

Mr. SHIVELY. It does not increase the total appropriation in any way?

Mr. CLAPP. It does not affect the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 40, at the end of line 17, I move to insert:

Ten thousand dollars of which shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 53, line 19, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Of which sum of $250,000, $25,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask the Senator to what will the $25,000 refer? In the line just previous to the proposed amendment you have dealt with a sum aggregating all of the appropriation. It seems to me the amendment will be a little bit out of place there.

Mr. CLAPP. No; that is just why it is put there. Commencing in line 16, page 53, it reads:

For the extension of the irrigation system on lands allotted to Yakima Indians in Washington, $15,000, and for construction of drainage system, $250,000.

Now, as it read heretofore—

In all, $265,000, of which amount $25,000 shall be immediately available.

It is desired to make the $25,000 available to come out of the $250,000 for the drainage system.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, what about the second $25,000, which is made immediately available?

Mr. CLAPP. I am going to complete my amendment by moving to strike that out.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see. If that is stricken out, it will be all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On the same page, in line 20, after the word "dollars," I move to strike out all of that line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 25 I desire to add an amendment. The bridge across Clearwater River at Red Lake, Minn., has recently been destroyed. I confess I have no estimate of this item for the Senate—that is, no formal estimate from the department—and the amendment is undoubtedly subject to the point of order.

On page 25, after line 4, I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to construct a bridge on the old Red Lake Agency road across Clearwater River, at or near the section line between sections 5 and 8, in township 150 north, range 37 west of the fifth principal meridian, $1,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, notwithstanding the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota that the amendment is subject to the point of order, I shall not raise a point of order for the reason that the Senate negatived my suggestion concerning a former item in the bill, which was so clearly subject to the point of order that I am quite prepared to let anything by way of legislation go in this bill now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 52, after the word "dollars," in line 11, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

That the provisions of section 4 of "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, and the acts amendatory thereof, approved June 11, 1896, and March 3, 1901, respectively, be, and are hereby, extended over and shall apply to the desert lands included within the limits of the former Uinta Indian Reservation, in Utah, not included in any forest reservation: Provided, That before a patent shall issue for any of the lands aforesaid under the terms of the said act, approved August 18, 1894, and amendments thereto, the State of Utah shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $1.25 per acre for the lands so patented, and the money so paid shall be subject to the provision of "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1902, and the acts amendatory thereof, approved March 3, 1903, and April 21, 1904.

That no lands shall be included in any tract to be segregated under the provisions of this act on which the United States Government has valuable improvements or which have been reserved for Indian schools or farm uses or for other purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I offer an amendment to come in after line 19, on page 58.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, after line 19, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry W. Lee, out of the funds of the Winnebago Indians, of Wisconsin, the sum of $2,000, being the amount found due said Lee by the Court of Claims, in congressional case No. 10219.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. I submit an amendment to come in on page 50, after line 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 2, insert:

That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases, for any annuities which may be due to said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands of Indians and the United States, dated September 29, 1837

(7 Stat. L., 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands, approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed; and said act of forfeiture and all subsequent acts and parts of acts and treaties inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed for the purposes hereof: Provided, That the court, in rendering judgment, shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of the passage of this act and shall determine and include the present value of the same and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against such amount so found all payments or other provisions, of every name and nature, made to or for said bands by the United States, or to or for any members thereof under the authority of any act of Congress, excluding treaties, since said act of forfeiture was passed, which are properly chargeable against said unpaid annuities.

Upon the rendition of such judgment, and in conformity therewith, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing on said roll the names of all living members of the said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom the names of those found to have participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

Proceedings shall be commenced by petition, verified by the attorney or firm of attorneys designated in a power of attorney dated January 4, 1910, and executed by John Eastman, assignee of Charles A. Eastman and Charles Hill, the attorneys in fact employed by said Indians under a contract bearing date November 27, 1896, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs June 29, 1897, and by the Secretary of the Interior July 1, 1897, and said suit shall be conducted by said attorney or firm of attorneys as attorneys of record, together with other counsel appearing in the case; and the court shall find and award upon a quantum meruit to said attorneys and their associates the compensation which shall be paid to them for services rendered and to be rendered, and distribute the sum thus awarded to such attorneys and their associates as their respective interests may appear, under agreements among themselves, which may be filed with the court, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sum of money to the said attorneys immediately upon rendition of final judgment, out of the proceeds of such judgment, if any, when an appropriation therefor shall be made by Congress.

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to apply, out of any funds to the credit of said Indians, the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the attorneys of said Indians in said case in the taking of testimony therein and defraying the expenses of printing incidental thereto.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me I have heard that bill read before. I will inquire of the Senator from South Dakota whether that bill has not passed the Senate heretofore?

Mr. GAMBLE. It has passed the Senate on two separate occasions. It passed during the last session of Congress, and it has been a subject of very careful investigation by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM. When did it pass at the present Congress?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yesterday.

Mr. CULLOM. Why should it be passed again?

Mr. SHIVELY. The bill has passed the Senate and gone to the House. The bill was originally introduced in the Senate, and it passed the Senate as an independent measure?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHIVELY. I do not want to raise a serious question as to it, but here we are providing for the employment of particular attorneys in a particular case and prescribing their compensation, and all this on an appropriation bill. I should like to have the Senator give some good reason why we should go to the extent of putting that kind of legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the compensation to the attorneys is to be determined by the Court of Claims. The Government does not pay the attorneys in the case, but it comes out of the Indian fund.

This is simply referring the claim to the Court of Claims to finally determine whether there is anything due the Santee Indians from the Government, and in the reference to the Court of Claims these are necessary provisions to have in the bill. It passed the Senate two years ago and was reported in the House, but failed of consideration. It was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate during the present session, and it passed the Senate. It is a matter which has been pending for a long number of years.

In 1863 the Government forfeited the annuities of these Indians. It is claimed by the Indians that there is an amount of money due them from the Government. It is insisted by the Government that there is nothing due them. This is simply referring the case to the Court of Claims to determine whether there is anything due the Indians.

This matter was fully discussed in the Senate two years ago, and after a full discussion it was passed. As I said, it has been a matter of very careful consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate and in the House for a number of years. Many reports have been made upon it. I think it is a just matter and that this is a wise disposition of the claim. I can go into the details if necessary, but I do not think that it is necessary at this time.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota how much money his modest little amendment contemplates to take out of the Treasury.

Mr. GAMBLE. It proposes to refer the case to the Court of Claims, to determine whether there is anything due these Indians.

Mr. KEAN. Is there any limitation in the amendment? I suppose the limit is the entire Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GAMBLE. Oh, no; the court is to adjudicate and settle the claim of the Santee Indians; that is, as against the Government.

Mr. KEAN. The annuities have been forfeited?

Mr. GAMBLE. They forfeited the annuities in 1863.

Mr. KEAN. On account of the war?

Mr. GAMBLE. On account of the trouble in Minnesota at that time. I might say, Mr. President, that four years ago the Sisseton Indians had a similar claim, and, under the identical provisions of this bill, it was referred to the Court of Claims to determine. This is the only case in the history of the Government where annuities were forfeited and where justice was not done to the Indians. Even in the case of the Five Civilized Tribes, in 1863, their rights were forfeited, but they were restored, and even an enlargement was made over the original provisions of the act.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Without dealing with the subject from the standpoint of a point of order, I desire to say that as careful a man as my distinguished predecessor, Senator Davis, who lived in the State where this outbreak occurred, went through this question very exhaustively some years, and reached the conclusion that it was a matter of record that the forfeiture was not warranted and that the annuities ought to be restored. I will say that in support of the merits of the claim.

Mr. KEAN. Of course, I suppose it would be useless to make a point of order against the amendment, because it would probably be submitted to a vote of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if this matter has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. GAMBLE. Twice.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly, it has been considered several times, and once this winter. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported the bill favorably, and the Senator from South Dakota had the bill passed through the Senate yesterday, I think.

Mr. KEAN. Yesterday; but the Committee on Indian Affairs did not report it as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly not.

Mr. GAMBLE. The bill was reported to the Senate before the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs on the appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. On page 37, after line 13, I move to insert:

After July 1, 1911, the Chilocco Indian School property, including the reservation of land in connection therewith, shall be transferred to the State of Oklahoma by the Secretary of the Interior upon the passage of an act of the legislature of Oklahoma accepting the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. CLAPP. Before the question is put, I suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that there should be added to the amendment: "In which event only the amount hereby appropriated for the school pro rate shall be appropriated," or some such limitation.

Mr. OWEN. The proposal which I make is to take effect at the end of the next fiscal year.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, I thought it was to take effect this summer.

Mr. OWEN. No, sir.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg pardon.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I do not know anything about the right or wrong of the Senator's amendment, but as I sit here and listen to the different amendments which from time to time are proposed I can only say that the workings of my mind are so slow that I get only a very imperfect idea of what is being done.

Mr. OWEN. I can explain to the Senator in a moment what this means.

Mr. PAGE. I will yield in one moment. It seems to me that matters of this kind ought to go before the proper committee and be there discussed. They ought not to come to us here when we are rushing through a bill in two or three hours calling for millions upon millions of dollars.

I do not object to the Senator's amendment. I do want to say, however, that I for one feel almost absolutely incompetent to vote with any sort of knowledge or judgment upon these amendments, and it seems to me that it is a wrong method of legislation.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, in this particular case the Chilocco School, which involves the United States in an annual expenditure of $90,000, would, if not discontinued, continue to make an annual draft of $90,000 on the Federal Treasury. The amendment which I now propose will put an end to that charge on the Federal Treasury. The State of Oklahoma is taxing its people abundantly to meet all the cost of these schools, and there is no reason for the continuance of the Chilocco School as a school.

I am informed that the administration no longer cares to continue it beyond the next fiscal year, and therefore I have offered this amendment, because the legislature of the State of Oklahoma has memorialized Congress that this property, under the circumstances, be transferred to that State, just as the Haskell Institute, of a similar character in Kansas, has been transferred to Kansas.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, in continuation of the thought which I brought out when on my feet before, I want to say that I have not the slightest idea from anything that has appeared before us to-day whether the grant of land to the State of Oklahoma is worth $1,000,000 or $100,000,000. It may be in the mind of the Senator from Oklahoma, but why should we here be asked to cede land of unknown value, without description, at this time, and under this pressure, without the question being understood in the usual way through the consideration of some committee.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the facts with regard to this matter are well known.

Mr. PAGE. By whom?

Mr. OWEN. By the President of the Senate, by the Senator from Oklahoma, and by the various members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I take it. This school ought to be discontinued. There is no need for its continuance any longer. It would simply continue a charge of $90,000 on the Federal Treasury if it is continued. If the Senator prefers to have that charge made continuously upon the United States, I shall yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma how this legislation can be enacted, in view of the fact that the admission act of Oklahoma prescribes that no further grant of lands shall be made to the State of Oklahoma than those enumerated in the admission act.

The question has recently been submitted to and passed upon by the department. They have held that where the admission act confers land grants upon a State and contains the provision that no other or further grant of land shall be made to the State, a bill of this kind is in violation of the constitution of the State and of the contract contained in the act of admission. I meerly call attention to it because it was called to my attention by the department within a few days.

Mr. OWEN. I will answer the Senator from Idaho in that particular by saying that the enabling act was an act of Congress, and that the authority of Congress is not precluded by a previous act of Congress. Congress has a perfect right to discontinue the appropriation for this school, and since it has become unnecessary the most reasonable thing in the world is to follow the Haskell precedent in Kansas and transfer the property to the State.

Mr. HEYBURN. My suggestion was directed entirely to the power of Congress to make a further land grant, not to the discontinuance of the school. I have not given attention to the position taken by the department in regard to the prohibition as to whether the admission act can be amended. I do not think it can. I do not think that the admission act, which forms part of the constitution, can be amended except as a constitution might be amended; and the constitution of a State can not be amended in regard to the grants that flow from the Government to the State without submitting the amendment to Congress. It requires the action of both bodies.

That is the position taken by the law officers of the Department of the Interior. I would not undertake to say at this time what my ultimate conclusion might be or that of any other person in running down their legal argument.

Mr. OWEN. I think that the act of both the State and of Congress is necessary. The amendment provides that the State, through its legislature, shall accept the grant of this property, and thereafter the United States of course will be relieved of this charge.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, while I sympathize to some extent with the remarks of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], I think this amendment is about the most meritorious that has been offered here. To my mind there ought to be half a dozen more of the nonreservation schools abolished in this very bill. About the only way you will stop the expenditure of $90,000 a year for this school and others is by turning them over in some way to the States in which they are situated. I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether, in view of his statement that there is no use for this school, we can cut out the appropriation for the next fiscal year and turn it over to the State of Oklahoma, abolishing the $90,000 appropriation?

Mr. OWEN. It is entirely agreeable to the Senator from Oklahoma to cut this appropriation for this year out of the bill and have the property turned over on July 1, 1910, striking out the appropriation for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. DIXON. Then, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma by striking out the appropriation for this school for the next fiscal year, and let us save the Government the $90,000.

Mr. OWEN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. The land is worth a good many times $90,000.

Mr. DIXON. The land is worth ten times that amount. The Government will be ahead on the trade by turning it over to Oklahoma and abolishing this nonreservation school. There are half a dozen such schools that ought to be abolished in the same way. What is the line, and on what page?

Mr. OWEN. Page 37, lines 9 to 13.

Mr. DIXON. I move, as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, to strike out lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, page 37, and to insert "after July 1, 1910" in the amendment in lieu of "after July 1, 1911."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. There are 13,000 acres of that land within the school reservation, and there is no good reason for giving Oklahoma any such tract as that. This is one of the best Indian schools in the country, and it should be maintained until some proper arrangement can be made for reducing it to the proper size, and then such disposition should be made of the land and plant as Congress may think best.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. DIXON. I want to say, in answer to the Senator from Kansas, that I do not know what the land is, but we are just $90,000 ahead on the trade. If it is worth $10 an acre, it is $130,000, and one year's appropriation almost pays for it. That is the only way, from a practical standpoint, that you will ever get rid of these nonreservation schools. Every man who has got one in his State naturally is interested from local pride and pressure in getting appropriations for it. The only school we had in Montana went out this year without any protest on my part, and at my suggestion. If we can get rid of this school by giving it to Oklahoma, thus saving $90,000 the first year, in five years we will have saved nearly half a million dollars. Let us give it to them. It is the only way you will ever get such items out of the annual appropriation bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if this school is abandoned it will be necessary to send the scholars who are now attending it to some other Indian school and make additional appropriations for them. I do not believe in that section of the country there is any school better adapted for the work of educating the Indians than Chilocco; and I do hope that the school will be maintained until some arrangement can be made for reducing the school reservation.

I want to state to the Senator from Montana that I heartily agree with the proposition to reduce the nonreservation schools; I think we have too many of them; but I do not believe it is a good plan to give 13,000 acres of land to the State of Oklahoma when that amount is not needed and when that land should be disposed of in some other way. Should the school reservation be reduced to a reasonable size and when nonreservations are abolished or reduced in number, then, so far as I am concerned, I shall have no objection to disposing of this school property, either by turning it over to the State or by converting it into an agricultural school, whichever may be considered best at the time. I very much appreciate what was said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] this morning. I think there should be a change in the Indian school system; but this is not the time nor place to make it. It should be carefully considered by the committee, after consultation with the proper officers. I hope that the amendment to abolish the school at this time will not carry.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if the Haskell School was not turned over to the State of Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. It has not been, and I have opposed turning it over to the State at this time.

Mr. OWEN. Is it not contemplated to turn it over?

Mr. CURTIS. It is not at this time.

Mr. OWEN. I understood that it was.

Mr. CURTIS. Haskell and Chilocco are two great schools and should be maintained. They are nearer to the Indians than are the other nonreservation schools. They are doing wonderful work among the Indians, and they are schools which could be used for several years for higher education. They should be maintained by this Government, and changes should be made in other sections of the country before these two schools are abolished.

Mr. OWEN. Every facility in the world is offered to the youth of Oklahoma, both for common schools and high schools. There is no longer any need in that State for this school, and I hope the Senate will permit the matter to be transferred to Oklahoma.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. Is it not a matter of fact that as to nearly every one of the nonreservation schools, with which this bill is loaded, in order to get Indian pupils the superintendents of those schools scour the whole country and the different reservations with a fine-tooth comb begging, pleading, and threatening in order to get children and carry them 200, or 300, or 400 miles to place them in the nonreservation schools?

Mr. CURTIS. That has not been the case at all in the last three or four years. In fact, the superintendents of the schools complain that the rules prohibit them from going out and bringing the children in. They have not practiced that in either of those schools for the last two or three years, so I am informed.

Mr. DIXON. How long has it been since that rule was established?

Mr. CURTIS. I think it was about two years ago that that rule was made.

Mr. DIXON. Yes. I remember very distinctly a year ago last summer seeing the superintendent of one of these nonreservation schools spending two weeks on a certain reservation trying to get children and carry them across the mountains 300 miles to put them in another school not a bit better than the reservation school. While I think that to give the State of Oklahoma 13,000 acres of land is extending the mantle of charity pretty far, in the end the United States Government will be ahead of the game if we cut that string right now and save $90,000 on this appropriation bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I was unavoidably absent from the Senate when the pending amendment came up and, if there is no objection, I should like to be advised as to the real status of this item.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], to which the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] has offered an amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, beginning in line 9, it is now proposed to strike out the following words:

> For support and education of 500 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Chilocco, Okla., and for pay of superintendent, $83,500; for general repairs and improvements, $6,500; in all, $90,000.

And in lieu of those words to insert the following:

> After July 1, 1910, the Chilocco Indian School property, including the reservation of land in connection therewith, shall be transferred to the State of Oklahoma by the Secretary of the Interior upon the passage of an act by the legislature of Oklahoma accepting the same.

Mr. CURTIS. Why, Mr. President, in all our legislation no amendment has gone that far. There has always been a condition attached, that the State should maintain a school if the school property was turned over, and that they should permit the Indian children to attend the school; and I hope the Senate will not agree to turn over the school without any conditions whatever.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. Let me ask the Senator from Kansas a question before he takes his seat. This is a school for 500 Indian children, and the bill carries an appropriation of $83,500. It ought to be a very fine school.

Mr. CURTIS. It is one of the best nonreservation schools in the United States.

Mr. CLAY. It has been said on the floor of the Senate that this amendment ought to prevail for the simple reason that Oklahoma now is a State and has a system of common schools, which are taking care of her children. Now, I would ask whether there are not other provisions in this bill for the maintenance of schools for the Indians in that State?

Mr. CURTIS. There are several of them—quite a number.

Mr. CLAY. If we are going to proceed on the theory that because a few Territories that have been organized into States have established a system of common schools, therefore we ought not to have any Indian schools. Why should we single out this school and abolish it, and leave the other Indian schools there? I can not see any justice in it. If we are going to start a new system and strike down all of our Indian schools and let the State take care of the Indians, then we would be consistent; but to strike this down, it being a school of 500 students, and let the others stand, making no provision for them, it strikes me is a very serious matter.

Mr. CURTIS. And I might add, Mr. President, 13,000 acres of very valuable land.

Mr. CLAY. Perhaps it is the land that is wanted instead of the school.

Mr. CURTIS. It probably is.

Mr. SHIVELY. I think——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. I should think that the argument of the Senator from Georgia would be very convincing to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I heartily agree with the argument.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. I intended to say that I agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. I can not see any justice in maintaining other schools and striking this one down, and it appears to be one of the most prosperous schools in that State.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

> The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to enroll on the respective citizenship and freedmen rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes those 52 persons who were found to be entitled to enrollment by the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, and who are enumerated by name in the report of said commissioner to the Secretary under date of November 15, 1907, but whose cases did not reach the department in time to permit the writing of the names of said persons on the said rolls before their final approval by the Secretary on March 4, 1907, on which date said rolls were closed by operation of law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. OWEN. What is that amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask that the amendment be again read?

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have it again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will again be stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment submitted by Mr. McCUMBER.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. SHIVELY. I should like to inquire of the author of that amendment whether the addition of these names was approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. McCUMBER. They were approved by the commissioner.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Committee on Indian Affairs have spent days—and I do not know but that I might say weeks, and perhaps that would be true—in considering these identical matters. Not only did we find difficulty in deciding what should be done with regard to the Indians referred to by the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], but there are something like 2,900 children born since 1905 about whom we are in great doubt. I simply want to reiterate what I have before said, that I do not believe this is the time or the place to enter into a discussion of that matter. It should come up before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and be carefully considered and passed upon there. To do it at this time is to spring upon us, it seems to me, a kind of discussion which we are not prepared to meet and which is largely ex parte.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that there never has been the slightest doubt in the minds of any of the committee as to these 52 persons. It is an act that ought to have been done long ago. There is question as to those in excess of this number; and with that doubt certainly the committee would not think of bringing that matter in. But as to these 52, the department, the committee, and everyone who is familiar with the subject have felt for a long time that their names ought to be placed on the roll. As to them there is absolutely no question in the mind of any member of the committee.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this amendment was considered by the entire committee?

Mr. CLAPP. This amendment, as well as the whole subject of the names which have been left off those rolls, has been considered for days and days by the committee.

Mr. DIXON. Has this bill been reported by the committee?

Mr. CLAPP. This particular item at this time?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir; but there never has been a time since this item first came to the committee but that as to these 52 the committee were agreed. The department had overlooked this matter; the time had expired; the limitation had run; and they are entitled to this relief.

In connection with that, the question how far Congress should go toward allowing other corrections to be made has been discussed, and the subject whether we should open up these rolls and what relief we should extend to these persons has been considered day after day by the committee. As to these 52, there never has been a moment the committee has had any doubt that they should be put on the rolls.

Mr. DIXON. These 52 are entitled to admission to the Creek rolls?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. These 52 belong to the Five Tribes; most of them are full-blood Indians, and they were especially enumerated, with a report as to each individual, made on November 15, 1907.

Mr. DIXON. I recall this case, Mr. President, since the chairman of the committee more fully refers to it, and I think there is no question that these 52 Creeks ought to be on the roll; but, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has just stated, at the last meeting of the committee, since the commission put 2,900 new-born children on the roll, here come the attorneys for the Creek Nation before the committee, asking that Congress appropriate $5,000,000 to make up the excess between the original portion in the division of those lands and what it was after we added 2,900 people.

Mr. CLAPP. That has no relation at all to this matter.

Mr. DIXON. It adds that many to the roll.

Mr. CLAPP. That was a question of the equalization of the Creek allotment, and we dealt with that by simply taking about 800 cases, approximately, and disposing of them.

Mr. DIXON. Yes; I think we did.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will state, so as to make this matter clear, that as the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] understands, and probably most of the Senators present understand, a commission was authorized to report the names of those Indians who should go upon the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes for the purpose of making proper distribution of their property. Under the law which authorized them to make the enrollment they were required to have the enrollment reported to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior was required to place the names of all persons upon the roll by March 4, 1907. The commission proceeded to make up the roll. They gave the proper notices, but a number of the Indians did not respond to those notices; they were not present and did not make their applications in time to reach Washington on the 4th of March, 1907. Their cases were, however, passed upon by the commission, who found that these Indians, most of whom, I believe, were full bloods, were entitled to be on the rolls, but as the rolls were closed on March 4, 1907, under the law the Secretary of the Interior could not place them upon the roll.

I am offering this amendment, which is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, so that it may go upon the bill at this time. The Senator from Montana understands as well as I do that there is no bill that comes before Congress from any important committee that is not likely to be amended upon the floor. There are many things that we may omit to place in a bill which should have been placed in it. Every bill has its amendments; but no one contends that this amendment should not be in this bill. It is proper; it is recommended by everyone; and certainly it should go on.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that I have no question that these 52 Creeks ought to go on that roll; but I merely want to call attention to the fact that two years hence or next year or some other number of years the attorneys for the Creeks will be here asking Congress to equalize the allotments of these 52, the same as they did those of the other 2,900. There ought to be some safeguard against it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to say, in answer to the Senator from Montana, that it is now proposed to close up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. There is a bill now pending in Congress for that purpose, and it is expected that by the end of the next fiscal year the affairs of the tribes will be concluded. This report of the Secretary has been held back by the committee and has never been acted on, for the reason that it was not deemed advisable to give any encouragement to the idea of opening these rolls in any respect. These are not all Creek Indians. A few of them are Creeks and a few of them Cherokees; but they belong to the Five Civilized Tribes. They came in a day or two too late under the law, and it is now proposed, since the affairs are to be wound up, to take care of them. That is all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the roll of the Cherokee Nation the names of Emily C. Howell and her children and the children of Catherine E. Howell, herein named, who are as follows: Emily C. Howell, mother; Emily C. Howell, jr., daughter; Ellen E. Howell, daughter; Robert E. Lee Howell, son; Thomas C. Howell, son; Frank R. Howell, son; Evan C. Howell, son; James C. Howell, son; Stephen E. Howell, son; Lettie P. Howell, daughter; Eston E. Howell, son; William T. Howell, son; Julia B. Howell, daughter; Charles C. Howell, son; Mary D. Howell, daughter; all the above being the children of Catherine E. and Emily C. Howell, the first and second wives of Archibald Howell, deceased.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I object to that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. KEAN. We adopted a similar amendment last year.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I inquire if such a bill was passed by the Senate last year?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was.

Mr. DIXON. Reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIXON. What was the report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to these children?

Mr. BACON. I am sure I do not know; but I can tell the Senator what the facts are.

Mr. CLAY. The bill was passed last year.

Mr. BACON. The bill passed the Senate at the last session.

Mr. DIXON. I have no question about the good intent of the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. BACON. It is not a question of intent.

Mr. DIXON. I remember a bill—it came pretty near passing—where by an act of Congress it was proposed to add 51 names to the roll of the Osage Indians. As a matter of fact, when the attorneys appeared before the committee, I thought the names sounded familiar, and when we went into the proof it turned out that the whole list, with possibly one or two exceptions, was composed of white Indians, living in California, in Georgia, in Wisconsin, and elsewhere, who had no more connection, legal or moral, with the Indians than any other white man in this country. They were seeking to get on the rolls because they had a sixteenth or thirty-second of Indian blood, because the privileges are worth from twenty to thirty thousand dollars per capita.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I will state the fact that these names have been on the rolls. They were submitted and placed upon the rolls by the commissioners. They were subsequently stricken from the rolls by the authorities because of the fact that they had not removed to the Territory within the stipulated time. The reason why they did not remove was the occurrence of the death of their father, which delayed them.

Mr. DIXON. Where were they living?

Mr. BACON. They were living in Georgia, where all the Cherokees originally lived.

Mr. DIXON. How much Indian blood have these children?

Mr. BACON. I do not know.

Mr. DIXON. Have they ever affiliated with the Cherokee tribe?

Mr. BACON. I can not tell the Senator anything about that.

Mr. DIXON. Have they ever been in the Cherokee Nation?

Mr. BACON. I suppose they have been. I will state that they live in the county where my colleague [Mr. CLAY] resides, and he knows them personally. The fact is that the proofs were all submitted and that they were at one time on the rolls. The commissioners who were appointed——

Mr. DIXON. Why were they stricken off?

Mr. BACON. I will wait until the Senator gets through, if he does not desire me to complete the statement.

Mr. DIXON. I will not interrupt again until the Senator finishes.

Mr. BACON. I do not object to interruptions if the Senator will interrupt at the proper time. The Senator asked me for information, and I was trying to give it. I was reciting the fact that the questions that he is now submitting are questions which were submitted to the commissioners appointed by the Government for the purpose of determining whether or not the parties were entitled to be upon the rolls; and they did determine that they were entitled to be upon the rolls, and did enroll them.

At that time their father was in life, but between the time of the enrollment and the time when they should have been located in the Territory the father died. They were young children, and they did not for that reason make their appearance within the Territory and locate within the Territory within the time stipulated. That is the whole case.

As to whether or not they had this percentage of Indian blood or that percentage of Indian blood in them, all those are questions which were passed upon by the commissioners, who were satisfied that these children were entitled to enrollment, and the commissioners did actually enroll them. The fact that their names were stricken from the rolls was entirely due to the reason I have stated, to wit, that their father died, and that by reason of that death they were not able to get to the Territory in the time the law required them to get there.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I merely want to say to the Senator from Georgia that I know nothing about the merits of the case, but I do know of the efforts, every day in the year, of white men trying to break into Indian rolls. It has led to lots of trouble and scandal and grief. I doubt whether there is an Indian tribe in the United States that has not got, I will say conservatively, one-fifth or one-sixth of its membership who have no moral right to be there. But in this case, if the Senator from Georgia, knowing the facts, says to me and says to the Senate he believes that morally, legally, and equitably these people should be on the rolls and by a mistake have been omitted, I withdraw the objection which I intended in the first place to make.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Montana takes his seat I should like to ask him if I understood him correctly to say that it would be worth $30,000 per capita to these people?

Mr. DIXON. I do not know about the Cherokees. In the case of the Osages, where a wholesale attempt was made last year to add 52 names to the rolls, it appeared in the hearing that the rights were worth $30,000 apiece. It also appeared in that case, on a full hearing, that not over two at the outside had any possible claim in morals. I remember the case of one child especially, on which the attorneys laid great stress. They had her picture there, and she was undoubtedly a half-breed Indian, but when the facts in the case were known it appeared the reputed father of that child had been in the penitentiary for three straight years prior to her birth. That was a sample.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I strongly object to this amendment. I do not think that these rolls ought to be opened at all. The amendment providing for the addition of 52 names was not equivalent to opening the rolls, and the very reason that the matter has been so long deferred was because of the number of claimants who would make their appearance and demand to be put upon the rolls if the rolls ever were opened. These rolls were closed by act of Congress on March 4, 1907, and they ought to remain closed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, this is not the case of an application to open the rolls. As I have stated, these names were on the rolls before they were closed. They were duly enrolled after examination by the commission. There was a father and a family of young children. After both the father and the children were enrolled, the father died, and for that reason the family of children were unable to get to the Territory within the time named. It is not to open the rolls; it is simply to have them restored to the rolls where they were formerly placed. It is not the case of a vast number of people, who had not made the application in the proper time, and who now come forward and ask that the rolls be opened, and that the rule be enlarged in their favor. The application was made in the proper time; the proofs were submitted to the commission; they were enrolled, and were legally on the roll, but were stricken from the roll subsequently under the circumstances I have stated. I do not suppose that there are many others who are in that position, if any.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the act of Congress of 1898 required, as a condition to enrollment, the previous residence, in good faith in the country, of the tribe to which application was made for citizenship. These claimants have lived in Georgia continuously. They were living in Georgia at the time of the passage of the act known as the Curtis Act, which laid down this rule, which was entirely justified upon the basis of equity and good sense, and that has now been twelve years ago. These claimants have continuously resided in Georgia ever since; they reside there now; and I think there is no more sound reason to put them upon the rolls than there would be to put anyone else on the rolls who had not complied with this provision of law, requiring residence in good faith previous to the passage of the act of 1898. I feel therefore obliged to protest against the enrollment of these people.

Mr. BACON. I want to state a fact that was not within my knowledge at the time I offered the amendment, but which I have just learned from my colleague [Mr. CLAY], and that is that a portion of these children were there before the enrollment, and that a number of them are married and now living in the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there is no report of the Secretary of the Interior giving the facts with regard to these people. We do not know anything about them, except what the Senator happens to know personally about their living in his State and about their being of some degree of Cherokee blood—how remote he does not know; perhaps a sixty-fourth or a one hundred and twenty-eighth. Some of them may have gone out there on a visit to some of their kinspeople, which would be very natural, and then returned to Georgia; some may have, for business purposes, gone there and be living there now, but what particular individuals we do not know. There is no authorized report upon it, and I submit that this is no way in which to add to the rolls of those tribes.

Mr. PAGE. I yield to no man in my respect for the two Senators from Georgia. Whatever they state I accept as gospel. I simply wish to insist, however, that any amendment involving as many points which ought to be investigated as this does, ought to have come before the Committee on Indian Affairs and received a full investigation by it. That committee exists for that purpose, and I can not understand why, after having done its work, we should come in here and, under the spur and pressure of getting off the appropriation bill in a short time, be compelled to take upon ourselves the investigation and decision of a matter as important as is this.

I shall vote for the wishes of the Senators from Georgia, because I think they are right as a matter of principle; but I desire to say that there is a higher principle to which I ought to adhere, and that is to vote against anything to which we can not give full and fair consideration at the proper time and in the proper place; and I believe no man agrees with me more in that than does the senior Senator from Georgia, who is a great stickler for constitutional rights and for regular order of procedure.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, my colleague has stated the real facts in regard to this matter, and I shall detain the Senate but a minute. The question as to whether or not the parties named in this amendment should be enrolled was heard by a commissioner, and he passed upon it in their favor, and they were dropped from the roll for the reason alleged—that they had never gone there and located on these lands, as the law requires. The commissioner himself, after he had heard the testimony in regard to the death of their father, would have readily concluded to reinstate them if he had thought he had the power under the law.

The Senator from Vermont is a very prudent and careful man, and we appreciate the fact that he watches jealously the interests of the Government at every step we take here; it ought to be done, and it is appreciated; but this question did come before the Committee on Indian Affairs at the last session of Congress, and it came before the Senate. The amendment was offered and discussed on the floor of the Senate, and after the facts were presented here it was unanimously adopted. This is not the first time it has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am sure the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is thoroughly familiar with this amendment. He has no objection to it, and he has not made any objection to it.

I do not wish to consume further time, because I know the chairman wants to get through with the bill this evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I offer an amendment which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, after line 10, insert:

That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Omaha tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party for determination of the amount, if any, due said Omaha tribe from the United States under the treaty between the United States and the said Omaha tribe of Indians, ratified and affirmed March 16, 1854, or any other treaties or laws, or for the misappropriation of any funds of said Omaha tribe for purposes not for its material benefit, or for failure of the United States to pay said Omaha tribe any money due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Omaha tribe against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim which the United States may have against said Omaha tribe of Indians, and to enter judgment thereon, with authority to allow interest upon such items as the court shall deem proper. The Court of Claims shall advance said cause upon the docket. If any question is submitted to said court, it shall settle the rights, both legal and equitable, of both the Omaha tribe of Indians and the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof in said cause shall be deemed a final settlement of all claims of said Omaha Indians against the United States. Such action in the Court of Claims shall be presented by a single petition, subject, however, to amendment, to be filed within one year after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the Omaha tribe of Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the Omaha tribe of Indians bases its claim for recovery; and the said petition may be verified by the attorney employed by the said Omaha Indians, to prosecute their claims under this act, under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law, upon information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements or verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, reports, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, which may be used in evidence, if competent, under the rules of said Court of Claims, shall be furnished as required by said court: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree such reasonable fees as the court shall find shall be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the Omaha tribe of Indians, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said Omaha tribe of Indians: Provided further, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court be in excess of amounts contained in the aforesaid contract as approved.

Mr. PAGE. I want to know something more about this amendment. I can not understand it.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator from Vermont is probably the only Senator present who does not understand it. We all regret that he did not get here three or four or five or ten years ago and he would have understood it. The amendment has been before Congress, and it is the settling up, or the beginning of the final settling up, we hope, with the Omaha Indian tribe. For something over fifty years there have been pending a great many differences between the Indians and the Government. There has been a good deal of treating back and forth between the Government on the one side and the Indian tribe on the other. There are a great many disputed claims, reaching back even to the time when we located the Omaha Indians on their present reservation. The department has finally thought there ought to be jurisdiction given to some court, some place, some tribunal, to hear and determine the matter. They decided upon the Court of Claims, where the Omaha tribe may go and present their claims and the Government may answer and the matter be adjudicated. As I have said, yesterday was the third time that the Senate has passed this bill. It has been considered on the floor and debated thoroughly and investigated by a good many Senators in times past. The only reason the Senator does not know about it is that he has not been here long enough.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURKETT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator whether he or the attorneys in this case have figured out how much money is likely to be taken from the Treasury?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say it is impossible to figure it out. That is one of the questions of evidence.

The principal claim is one for 14 cents an acre, which sum the Government agreed to pay these Indians for the excess of land that it took from the Indians over what it gave the Indians when it took them down and located them on this particular tract. As near as one can estimate it, without getting a survey properly made, it would figure, as has been stated here on the floor several times, and according to the department, and in various places, about $75,000. It may be more; it may be less; I do not know. Nobody can tell, because one would have to take the old maps and locate these boundaries. No surveying has been done, and no definite evidence as to that has been attempted to be put in.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was hoping, Mr. President, a much larger amount was called for by this amendment, because I want this bill to appear just as badly as it can.

Mr. BURKETT. If nothing worse goes into the bill than this amendment, the bill will stand the test.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand, or assume, that this amendment is to carry out certain treaty stipulations. It would not be in order otherwise.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand that this modifies the treaty stipulations and wipes out all limitations as to the character of the agreements contained in the treaty?

Mr. KEAN. That is the way with all these amendments which have been put on.

Mr. ALDRICH. It strikes me it is more or less in the nature of general legislation on an appropriation bill. It is for a private claim. It is not governed by the contract of the treaty.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I am not going to insist that the amendment is in order, I will say to the Senator, and it was not my intention to put it onto this bill. But that seemed to be the practice followed here to-day, and all the rest of them were put on; and since this is a matter we are all so familiar with, as to which the Senate has expressed itself on three different occasions and in favor of this amendment, it seemed to me a proper item to go on. Whether or not it modifies the treaty is a good deal of a question; as to whether the law we passed twenty-five years ago did not abrogate all treaty rights that the Omaha Indians had with the Government. But this amendment, I will say, is to adjust, to settle, a disputed claim arising from the treaty of 1857 with these Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. If I heard aright the reading of the amendment, it provides that the attorney fees shall be disposed of by contract. Is that correct? If so, I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that if we are able to keep this amendment on in conference we will have to modify that provision of it and send the question of fees to the Court of Claims, because the committee has determined that it will not send these matters with the contract, but will only submit it, together with the question of the fees, to the court.

Mr. BURKETT. The amendment provides—

That upon the final determination of such suit the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree such reasonable fees as the court shall find shall be paid to the attorney or attorneys.

Mr. CLAPP. I see.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I meant to add, when I was on my feet a moment ago, that I am not greatly concerned about this bill. Fortunately this body will not settle the form in which the bill will finally appear; and I see no reason why, in view of the fact that we have put on half a dozen amendments somewhat similar to this, we should not continue to put on amendments of this character, and let a certain other body and the conference committee deal with it.

I am very fully persuaded that when the bill finally appears as a statute of the United States it will be in a very different form from what it will be when it leaves this body, and that fact gives me a great deal of comfort.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Can the Senator from New Hampshire tell me approximately what is the gross amount involved in these various propositions; that is, as to appropriations?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator in charge of the bill can tell that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Probably the chairman can tell.

Mr. ALDRICH. I thought this was not reported from the committee. As I understood it, the amendment was offered by the Senator from Nebraska and was not reported by the committee.

Mr. CLAPP. I thought the Senator had reference to the bill generally.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I meant to ask as to these particular amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood these amendments were being adopted without the approval of the committee.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator is not right. The Senate approved of this and passed the bill yesterday.

Mr. CLAPP. They are not committee amendments.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are not committee amendments. That is what I meant.

Mr. BURKETT. But the Committee on Indian Affairs reported this in a separate bill and the Senate passed it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island, that I have endeavored to keep informed as to what we are doing to-day, as far as I could. I made a point of order against one amendment which carries $447,339, and I think perhaps an additional amount; at any rate that amount plus 5 per cent per annum interest. I do not know how far that goes back. The Senate did not agree that the point of order would lie against the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. It is his last suggestion to which I wish to call his attention. The interest does not go back at all on that money.

Mr. GALLINGER. No?

Mr. CLAPP. It simply draws interest in the future. It is a capitalization.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Then the amount is $447,339. Since then several amendments have been agreed to, and as a rule the Senators offering them have not been able to state definitely what they did carry. I should think, in answer to the Senator from Rhode Island, we have added probably two or three million dollars by these amendments.

Mr. KEAN. About the same increase as the committee reported.

Mr. ALDRICH. My reason for asking the Senator from New Hampshire instead of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill is that I understood these amendments were being put on rather against the protest of the committee having the bill in charge.

Mr. KEAN. Scarcely that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, the mild protest.

Mr. GALLINGER. The gentle protest.

Mr. ALDRICH. The gentle protest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HIGHWAY BETWEEN FORTS LEAVENWORTH AND RILEY, KANS.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 14547) providing for a military highway between Forts Leavenworth and Riley, Kans., be passed without prejudice when it is reached in regular order on next Wednesday. I do this for the reason that the author of the bill [Mr. ANTHONY] has been called to his home in Kansas, and can not be here.

Mr. HAY. I did not understand the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 14547), which was considered yesterday, for a military highway in Kansas, which is the unfinished business when reached on next calendar Wednesday, may be passed without prejudice, he making the statement that the gentleman [Mr. ANTHONY] is unavoidably called to Kansas, and will not return by Wednesday next.

Mr. HAY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the request is to pass that bill without prejudice on next Wednesday, until the Committee on Military Affairs is again reached on the call.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman modify his request?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That was not my understanding. My understanding was that it be passed without prejudice, and the Military Committee could go on with its other business on next calendar Wednesday, and that when Mr. ANTHONY came back, this bill could come up on calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not willing that that bill shall be passed in the House in that way, so that the Committee on Military Affairs could occupy two days and then, having occupied its two days in regular order, could get an additional day by having the bill called up whenever it sees fit. If he wishes to call it up when the Committee on Military Affairs is called again, there is no objection to that.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request to that extent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas modifies his request in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the request of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. I am asking unanimous consent that this bill when reached in the regular order next Wednesday may be postponed without prejudice until the next call of the Committee on Military Affairs after that day, when reached again in its regular order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would it precede any other bill from the Committee on Military Affairs?

The SPEAKER. It would be unfinished business and be postponed until a week from next Wednesday, until the Committee on Military Affairs is called again.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The point I want to get at is whether it would be called in advance of other bills.

The SPEAKER. It would not be called on next calendar Wednesday at all, but would come up on the subsequent calendar day when the Committee on Military Affairs is called. This would come up as unfinished business, because it is unfinished business now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That would not interfere with the Committee on Military Affairs going on with other business on next calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the request of the gentleman from Kansas, it will not interfere with the second calendar Wednesday, when the Committee on Military Affairs is called again. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the army appropriation bill (H. R. 15384), and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the conference report on the army appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

[For conference report and statement, see proceedings in the RECORD of March 7, 1910.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, there are several Members on this side of the House who want to be heard on this matter, and I ask for recognition in my own right.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not desire to yield the floor, Mr. Speaker, but to accommodate any gentleman I will yield time. How much time does the gentleman from New York want?

Mr. SULZER. I would like to have at least half an hour.

Mr. PRINCE. I will yield half an hour to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. And I yield ten minutes of that time to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I question whether he can do that under the rule.

The SPEAKER. It can be done by the gentleman from New York giving a list to the gentleman from Illinois, to whom he can yield.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to waive all that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the half hour yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] may be yielded by him to such Members as he desires to yield to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the city and from the House when this matter was up for consideration a few days ago, else I perhaps would have had something to say at the time in favor of the proposition; not that I am vain enough to suppose that I could have added anything to what was so ably said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and others in favor of the Senate amendment, but because I am so firmly convinced that justice to the parties concerned demands its adoption.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there are some five distinguished officers who are to receive the benefit of this provision if it should become a law. I am not familiar with the record of these gentlemen, save one, except as I gather the same from discussions that took place here some two weeks ago. But from their records as thus disclosed, I am fully persuaded they should one and all receive the consideration proposed in the amendment. I have, however, as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House for the past twelve or thirteen years, become familiar with the career and with the record of General Marshall, the present Chief of Engineers, and I wish to say that, in my judgment, he is well worthy of the promotion which this provision proposes to give him.

As a member of this committee, it has been my duty for all these years to study the reports and the works of the various members of the Engineer Corps of the War Department, and I feel that I am justified in the assertion that none have surpassed General Marshall in the ability displayed by him as a member of that corps.

It is true that he was in the civil war and has a civil-war record, which is one of the features that differentiates these officials from hundreds of others who might desire like recognition.

But as great as his services in the civil war may have been, it is not the only distinguishing feature of his career. His record as an engineer in the improvement of the rivers and harbors throughout the country likewise commends him to the favorable consideration of this body.

Mr. Speaker, we all admire the man who has won fame on the field of battle, but no less credit is due him who has borne a substantial part in the development of his country along the line of peaceful pursuits, and while we admire General Marshall for what he has done in battle, we also admire him for what he has done for our commerce.

Leaving the army and entering at West Point in 1864 he graduated there in 1868. Then, by reason of the record he had made in the academy, he was immediately attached to the engineering corps, which is recruited from year to year by addition from those who stand highest among the graduates of that great Military Academy. Since that time his carer has been a remarkable one.

He has been, first and last, engaged in all the great river and harbor works requiring a high order of engineering skill throughout the country. He constructed the Hennepin Canal, has been in charge of the work on the Mississippi River, on the Great Lakes, and last, but not least by any means, in charge of the harbor of New York. We all know what that harbor is—that it is the greatest in this country and among the very few great harbors in the world. Into and out of it flows the greatest commerce that comes into or goes out of any harbor in this country, and perhaps in the world.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is true.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is my information. From imports into that harbor more customs duties are collected than from any other harbor in the country. Perhaps I am safe in saying that more money is paid into the United States Treasury in the shape of customs duties from New York than all the rest of the cities in the United States combined. Hence it is a harbor that has justly claimed and received the utmost care and attention at the hands of Congress. Now, in the most critical period of the development of that harbor, when it was found necessary to increase the depth from 30 to 40 feet—a most colossal undertaking—in order to accommodate the steady and rapid increase in the draft of seagoing vessels, a man was sought to take charge of this great work, and General Marshall, from all the engineers in the army, was selected for the task. [Applause.] How he performed his work, Mr. Speaker, is known to many, and is set forth in the testimonials which I find in the RECORD of two weeks ago, and placed there by the gentleman from New York. That harbor to-day, as a result of the judicious expenditure of appropriations made by Congress, has the magnificent depth from the outer bar to the city docks of 40 feet.

Others there were who doubtless might have done the same work, but the fact remains that by reason of his acknowledged ability he was selected for the task.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that I have no doubt the other gentlemen are also worthy of the consideration this amendment would give them, and they should have it both as a matter of right and on account of the precedent heretofore established by which General Mackenzie and a few others with him were accorded a like promotion, but when we invoke that precedent we are told that it was a bad one and should not have been established. I want to dissent from that view. It, in my opinion, is not a bad precedent. The gentlemen who were promoted at that time were distinguished officers of the Government. So that in thus advancing those parties we did justice to them in so far as it was possible to do justice to such distinguished officers by this class of legislation.

But the precedent is established and should be followed, and I submit that it would be a great injustice to those whom this bill would benefit not to treat them as we treated the others.

It will, Mr. Speaker, add but little to the expenses of the Government—not more than five or six thousand dollars a year—and only to be continued at best for a few years. Doubtless, any of these gentlemen could have earned in civil life a much larger sum from year to year than the Government has paid them for the services it has exacted and received from them. Certainly no one, after duly considering the matter, would withhold from them the promotion and consequent emoluments this provision would give them. I trust the amendment may be adopted by this House. [Applause.]

I believe that is all, Mr. Speaker, that I care to say, but with the consent of the House would like to add as a part of my remarks the military record of General Marshall, as furnished by the Adjutant-General to Congress on January 20, this year, which is as follows:

Statement of the military service of Brig. Gen. William L. Marshall.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

He was a member of the Missouri River Commission from November, 1897, to June, 1902.

General Marshall was on duty in New York City from January, 1900, to July, 1908, during which period he was in charge of the defensive works of New York Harbor and of river and harbor improvements, especially the deep channels entering New York Harbor, and was a member of various boards on fortifications and improvements. Since July, 1908, he has been in charge of the office of Chief of Engineers and of engineering works under the control of that office, and has been a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification and the Inland Waterways Commission.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General.

JANUARY 20, 1910.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] use some of his time.

Mr. PRINCE. I may not want my whole thirty minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Well, let the gentleman use now what he wants.

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, no; I want to close the debate.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] wants to be heard in favor of the amendment, and I am waiting for him to come in. He will be here in a few minutes, and I trust the gentleman, or somebody on his side, will now occupy some of the time.

Mr. PRINCE. Well, to accommodate my colleague I yield five minutes to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I was not present at the conference between the two Houses on this amendment. I know nothing as to the discussion that took place there. It was called when I was not here, but as it was a disagreement, which was reported, I had no objections to letting it go on.

I want to correct one or two statements that I made when this matter was before the House on the first report of the conferees. I stated there that this affected only five men, but my impression is that it affects more than that. The Senate, after the matter had been reported out by the Committee on Military Affairs, struck out the words "who served as an officer or enlisted man in the civil war," and with those words out, if the amendment is adopted, it would take in anyone who attended the academy as a cadet during the civil war, even if for only a few days before the close of the war, so that it is broader in its scope than I had in mind when discussing it; broader in its scope than The Adjutant-General had in his mind when he gave his opinion as to whom it would affect, and I want simply to correct that so that the House may have the full information—that it would not only take those that are now on the active list, but if any one of those who were cadets at that time should be commissioned a brigadier-general and serve a year, he would also when retired be promoted to the grade of major-general.

I think that is all that I care to say in regard to the matter at this time. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois use a little more of his time?

Mr. PRINCE. Why, no; you can not well ask me to do that now.

Mr. SULZER. Is there anybody else on your side who desires to speak?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; there may be if there are some arguments advanced; but if there are no arguments, that will shorten the time for debate on this side.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, all matters in controversy between the two Houses on the army appropriation bill have been agreed to by the conferees except amendment No. 21, which the Senate incorporated in the bill. I will read that amendment now for the benefit of the House:

Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, extend the proviso contained under the heading "Retired officers" in the act making appropriation for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, approved March 2, 1907, so as to include any officer who served creditably in the regular or volunteer forces of the United States during the civil war, and who is now and has been for a period of not less than one year serving as a brigadier-general on the active list of the army, and who at date of retirement will have served in the army more than forty years.

Mr. Speaker, if this proviso should be adopted it will affect the following officers: Generals Thomas, Morton, Hodges, Brush, and Marshall, now brigadier-generals, and retire them, in the discretion of the President, when they reach the age limit, as major-generals. I will give briefly their records in the Army of the United States.

Gen. Earl D. Thomas has been in the service, volunteer and regular, for over forty-seven and one-half years. He has been a brigadier-general for two years and ten months. He will be retired January 4, 1911, and when retired will have served forty-eight and one-half years. He is now the commander of the Department of Colorado.

Gen. Charles Morton has been in the volunteer and regular service for over forty-eight years. He has been a brigadier-general two years and ten months. He will be retired on account of age March 18, 1910. When retired he will have been in the service over forty-eight years. He is now commander of the Department of Missouri.

Gen. Charles L. Hodges has been in the volunteer and regular service forty-four years and two months. He has been a brigadier-general two years and nine months. He will be retired on account of age on March 13, 1911. He will have served continuously, when retired, forty-five years and three months. He is now commander of the Department of Dakota.

Gen. Daniel H. Brush has been in the volunteer and regular service forty-two years and nine months. He has been a brigadier-general two years. He will be retired on account of the age limit May 9, 1912, and when retired will have served continuously for over forty-five years. He is now in command of a department in the Philippines.

Gen. William L. Marshall has been in the service, volunteer and regular, forty-six years and nine months. He has been a brigadier-general one year and seven months. He will be retired on account of the age limit June 11, 1910, and when retired will have served continuously over forty-seven years. He is now Chief of the Corps of Engineers of the Army.

Splendid men; grand records; great officers.

This provision for the retirement of these distinguished officers of the army was before the House on the 25th of February. The House then refused to concur in the matter, and it went back to conference. The Senate conferees again declined to yield, and continue to adhere tenaciously, as a matter of justice, in favor of this amendment. If the House takes the same position now that it did on the 25th day of February, I can see a deadlock between the Senate and the House conferees that may imperil the enactment of the army appropriation bill.

Now, sir, I am in favor of the adoption of the amendment under consideration because I believe it to be just to most deserving men. I voted in conference to concur in the amendment, and I shall vote for it here because I am in favor of justice to all men in the army or out of the army. The adoption of this amendment leaves it in the discretion of the President to extend the act which this Congress passed in 1907, so that the five brigadier-generals whom I have mentioned can be retired like their predecessors on the staff at a grade higher. We can trust the President in the matter.

I have served on the Committee on Military Affairs of this House for a good many years, and I know something about military matters. I want to treat the line officers just the same as the staff officers. It is a mistake for Congress to discriminate between the staff and the line. The staff officers live here in Washington. They exert, I know, an influence. They attend the pink teas; they dance with the ladies; they reach the ear of Congress; and they get favors and promotions through legislation which the line officers out on the frontier do not get. That is the trouble in this case. We gave the privilege to the staff and now withhold it from the line. It is a mistake, in my judgment, for a Congress to refuse to do simple justice in this matter and treat the line officers just as well as it has treated the staff officers. I do not know a single one of these five brigadier-generals. I know their records in the army, however, and I stand here to testify that the records of these generals are as creditable and as commendable as the record of any soldier in this country during the past forty years. I have no interest in this matter save as it appeals to my sense of justice. I do not know if these officers ask for this legislation. They are far removed from the potent influences in and around this Capitol. They are on the frontier doing the work of the Government, and, in my opinion, they are entitled to just the same consideration that we have so generously extended to the generals of the staff.

All honor, I say, to Morton and Marshall and Thomas and Brush and Hodges. All of these officers saw hard service during the war for the Union. Some of them afterwards went to West Point and graduated, and all of them have been in the Volunteer and Regular Army for more than forty years. They have been on the firing line in the Indian wars. Most of them did heroic service for years on the frontier.

They went through the Spanish-American war, and did gallant service for the country. In the judgment of those familiar with the great services they have rendered they should have this recognition. To do otherwise would be an unjust discrimination against them. We retired recently, at one grade higher, under the act referred to in this proviso, several brigadier-generals on the staff who never performed the services that these officers have rendered. We should be fair and just in this matter to all. We will be recreant to our duty if we now discriminate against them. They are the last of the brigadier-generals in the army who served gallantly during the civil war. They should be treated the same as the other brigadier-generals who were retired as major-generals. I do not believe in making invidious distinctions. These generals should be retired, as well as their predecessors, as major-generals. As a conferee of this House I believe that it is just; I believe it is right; and I believe that we should agree to it, and give these battle-scarred veterans the rank to which they are justly entitled when retired for age.

Mr. CRAIG. What is the custom, or law, if there is any, on the subject, as to advancing one grade the privates, noncommissioned officers, and officers of the lower grades after long and faithful service?

Mr. SULZER. The law provides for the retirement of the officers below that of a general at a grade higher, if they served in the civil war.

Mr. CRAIG. They are now advanced one grade, are they not?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; all officers below brigadier-generals.

Mr. CRAIG. All except the brigadier-generals?

Mr. SULZER. All officers below brigadier-generals. That is the law passed by Congress a few years ago.

Mr. MADDEN. Are privates advanced a grade when they are retired?

Mr. SULZER. No; but they should be, in my opinion, if they served in the civil war.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not?

Mr. SULZER. Because the gentleman's party did not legislate that way.

Mr. CRAIG. To whom does that law apply?

Mr. HAY. It applies only to men who served in the civil war.

Mr. SULZER. Quite so.

Mr. CRAIG. It does not apply to privates, noncommissioned officers, captains, and lieutenants?

Mr. SULZER. It applies to all officers below the rank of brigadier-general who served in the civil war.

Mr. CRAIG. Well, does that apply to noncommissioned officers and privates?

Mr. SULZER. It applies to noncommissioned officers, but not to privates.

Mr. PARKER. It does not apply to brigadier-generals.

Mr. SULZER. I said that; and now I want to say again that these five officers were volunteers during the civil war, and when they went to that war they were all boys under the age of 18 years. They have served their country ever since with great distinction, and they have risen through merit, and merit alone, step by step until they have reached the rank of brigadier-general.

Mr. Speaker, as I have often said before, I am now, and always will be, the friend of the soldiers and the sailors of the Union—the bravest men on land and sea that ever faced a foe; those heroic men who saved the Republic from destruction in the darkest hour of its history. They need no eulogy. The glorious Union is their monument. More than two-thirds of the soldiers and the sailors who participated in that tremendous struggle have been gathered to the fathers, and those that remain will soon cross the "great divide" to join their comrades on "fame's eternal camping ground." During the few years they will be with us on earth I believe it is the duty of the Government to care for those in poverty and distress. The Republic owes the soldiers and the sailors for the Union a debt of gratitude it can never pay, and gratitude to these brave men should be the fairest flower that blossoms in the great heart of our reunited country. Our soldiers and our sailors, whether officers or privates, should be generously treated. That is the least we can do for them in their declining years. Those that are incapacitated and dependent should be liberally pensioned. As Lincoln said, "The Nation should care for those who have borne the battle."

Imbued as I am, sir, with these sentiments, I can not vote against this amendment to do justice to these brave and distinguished officers, who have spent all their lives in the service of their country. I am opposed to any discrimination against them. I am opposed to any legislative discrimination between the officers of the staff and the officers of the line. If we are going to discriminate at all it should be in favor of the men who are on the firing line and in the positions of danger; the men who risk something and who do the fighting; the men who are away out on the frontier and in the fever swamps of the Tropics; the men who are busy in sunshine and in storm, in the Orient and in the Occident, with our soldier boys from sunrise to sunset, from the time our flag goes up until the time the flag of the Union comes down. But I am opposed to any discrimination, and for that reason I am taking the same position here that the Senate has taken unanimously. Hence, I trust that the House will vote to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy any more time, because there are other gentlemen who desire to be heard. I now move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment, and I ask to have that motion pending.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be considered as pending.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is recognized.

Mr. PRINCE. How much time has the gentleman, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have never been an ardent advocate of indiscriminate pensions, but I do firmly believe, and I believe it coming from south of Mason and Dixon's line, too, in judicious honoring of men for meritorious service. I believe in the star of the Legion of Honor; and if there were ever claims before this House that were just, it is the claims of those brigadier-generals, which have been so ably presented to the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. It is perfectly apparent that if these men fail to secure what their friends are asking, it will not be for any lack of service, it will not be for any lack of the rugged worth of the soldier, but for the want of the smooth arts of the courtier and the lobbyist.

These men all, without exception, were volunteers. They all felt the fine impulse of the soldier, because after the war was over and after they had served with distinction, after they had been promoted for their excellence and their valor, many of these men sought the academy at West Point, perfected themselves in the science as they had already honored themselves and the Flag by the mastery of the art of war; again entering the service of their country, they have waited until this day, not around this Capitol, seeking preferment, but in the face of privations and danger, silent and faithful in the discharge of their duties. Now, at the end of a well-spent and an honorable life, these rugged brigadiers ask only what has been given to their predecessors.

In my opinion it would be a shame and an outrage to discriminate against them. Every one of these men has a right—if you pension anybody, if you give a bonus to anybody—every one of these men has the right to retire with this title of major-general; and, in the language of Lincoln, "It is not so much what we say here, but what they did," that entitles them to recognition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I ask my colleague to yield the gentleman some more time.

Mr. PRINCE. I could not consent to do that, because the chances are my time will be used up.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Without coming out of the hour?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, without calling any names, I recall the services of one of those five brigadiers. He is not a resident of my district, he is not of my political faith; I owe nothing to him, and he owes me nothing; but his career in wearing the blue when my father wore the gray is a part of the glorious history of a State noted for men of intrepid valor. He was an ideal soldier. He went into the war when most boys of his age were playing marbles. He served with the most conspicuous distinction for capacity and for courage. At the close of the war he was admitted to West Point. He was graduated with honor, and from that day until this there has never been a time when his country needed either his courage or his talents that he did not respond, and this is the first time that any friend of his has ever asked even common justice for him from this country. To have so honored his predecessors and refuse this meed of justice to this soldier, with his flawless record and his devoted life, would be unworthy of the Federal Congress. We are not asking anything for these five men that you have not done for others; and to draw a distinction between the staff officer and the line officer, to draw a distinction between the man who saw the fight and the man who made it, between the weather-beaten veteran who remained on the firing line in war and who remained in the place of privation and discomfort in peace, in favor of the man who was comparatively out of danger at times when the struggle was hottest, and who luxuriated in the smile of those in power when the struggle was over, would be unworthy of men who honor the volunteer and who have hitherto been liberal in caring for him. The lives of these men are a part of the history of your country, and you can not afford to mar that history by this refusal, which, in a way, will be a reflection upon them. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. I now yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, to be a major-general is to be one of the most conspicuous figures in the life of our Nation. To promote a man to a major-generalship is to accord to him the highest honor which can be attained in the United States Army. A promotion to this position should never be made except for conspicuous gallantry on the field of battle. Can anyone say that either of the men proposed to be promoted by this bill have rendered any service on the field in command of troops?

Not one of these men have commanded troops in the field, save one, and he only in an inconspicuous way. The man to whom the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] has just referred served one year and one month as a private soldier in the Volunteer Army. Two millions of American citizens gave as conspicuous service to the Nation as did he, and more conspicuous service. Two millions of American men gave to their country the best that was in them from 1861 to 1865. Six members of my own family, from the beginning to the close of the war, offered their lifeblood that the Nation might be saved. They were not in the army during the last year of the war; they were in the army from the beginning to the close; they were private soldiers. They can only draw $12 a month pension as the result of their service. Why promote the man who has had the good fortune to become a brigadier-general to a major-general, who has never done any service, but has only been conspicuous in the command of a corps of clerks?

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman from Illinois vote in favor of the bill of General SHERWOOD, of Ohio, to give all the soldiers of the civil war who were honorably discharged a pension of a dollar a day?

Mr. MADDEN. That is not a question that has anything whatever to do with the proposition now before the House, but "the gentleman from Illinois" unhesitatingly says to the gentleman from New York, who seems to want to get some notoriety by asking a question that has nothing to do with the case——

Mr. SULZER. I have all the notoriety I want. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I am willing to accord to every private soldier who fought in defense of his country every honor to which he is entitled at the hands of this great Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman vote to pay him a pension of a dollar a day?

Mr. MADDEN. I am willing to pay them all the pension that the Congress of the United States thinks ought to be paid, whether it is $1 a day or $2 a day.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois is begging the question.

Mr. MADDEN. The "gentleman from Illinois" is not avoiding any question that may arise in connection with this or any other proposition which may come before this House for consideration, but the gentleman from Illinois believes that a brigadier-general who has never done any more conspicuous service for his country than to command a corps of clerks, and who, when retired, receives a retired pay of $375 a month for the rest of his life, is honored to every extent that he deserves to be by the Nation under which he has served. But there is no reason why a brigadier-general should be promoted to a major-generalship and retired at the pay which he draws in active service as a brigadier, while private soldiers who served their country in time of need are limited to the paltry sum of $12 a month to maintain them in their declining years.

Mr. COX of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman how much pay this would give a major-general?

Mr. MADDEN. Five hundred dollars a month on retired pay as a major-general, and $375 a month on retired pay as a brigadier-general. These men were educated at the expense of the Nation. They have held rank on the pay roll of the Nation since they graduated from West Point. They have had a good job; they have had no risks to run; there have been no wars; and they have been acting mostly as civilians during all of their official career. They ought not now to be made conspicuous and have honors placed upon them which will make them rank with men who fought in the battles for the preservation of the Union as commanding officers in the civil war. This rank should be given to no man except for conspicuous gallantry in the field, and if we grant them this rank now it will be an evidence that there is no longer any honor to be attached to the position of a major-general of the American Army. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Cockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18162) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DOLLIVER, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. MONEY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman from Illinois remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has eighteen minutes.

Mr. PRINCE. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the proposition of the gentleman from New York that seems to be unfair to the House. The parliamentary situation is this: This military bill passed the House and went to the Senate. The Senate amended it, and the House disagreed to the amendment. Now the gentleman from New York says that unless we agree to this amendment the bill will fail.

Mr. SULZER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not say the bill would fail.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman said that the Senate would not recede.

Mr. SULZER. I said "in my opinion."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did not understand the gentleman to say "in his opinion." The parliamentary situation is just this——

Mr. SULZER. There is no danger of the bill failing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the House disagrees to this amendment, the Senate must recede. It is a proposition for a new thing entirely outside of the legitimate provisions of the bill. This amendment goes further than I have understood it to do before. It not only takes in the men to which the gentleman from New York has referred, who had service during the civil war, but it takes in men who went to school at West Point the last year of the war and who never were in the army during the war, outside of their position of cadets, and promotes them upon retirement. I am not in favor of any law that will take from the Military Academy a student and place him on a par with the men who served in the field during the civil war. As far as I am concerned in respect to this amendment as it is now, I shall reverse my vote and vote against concurring. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not so much interested at this time as to whether the House should promote these brigadier-generals to major-generals as I am about maintaining the dignity of this House. This House on the 25th of February, after a full discussion in the House, voted not to concur in this Senate amendment, and under all the parliamentary practices of the two Houses, if the House refuses to concur in the amendment, the Senate must recede from its amendment. We took a vote and by a vote of 70 to 51 the House decided that it would not agree to the Senate amendment. That ought to be considered a final vote. There must a time come when, if the House proposes to uphold its dignity, it will say it will not back and fill upon these propositions. If it is the intention of this House to say a thing, let it stand by its guns. [Applause.] Let the Senate recede from a proposition about which there may have been a difference of opinion, but now when the House after discussion has taken its stand upon the amendment, let the parliamentary practice between the two Houses be insisted upon, and let the Senate give way on its amendment. If we do not do that in this kind of a case, we might as well abolish the House of Representatives and say that the legislative authority of the Government is vested in the Senate of the United States, and I am not yet willing to agree to that proposition.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, the army appropriation bill passed the House. It went to the Senate. The Senate made a number of amendments to the bill. Conferees were appointed and all of the differences were adjusted, either the House or the Senate receding from its amendments, and a complete report was agreed upon, except as to amendment 21, which promotes a number of officers for civil-war service. These officers now are brigadier-generals, occupying the second highest rank in the army. They are receiving an annaul pay of $6,000 and a monthly pay of $500. If they should now go upon the retired list, they would receive a monthly pay of $375.

Mr. STANLEY. This is entirely within the discretion of the President, is it not, even if the bill is passed?

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, no. Let me pass on and I will read that in a moment. Here is a provision to allow the President to promote these gentlemen, if he sees fit. Very well; but if the House and the other branch passes the law, it is almost obligatory upon him to do so. Now, let us go back to the President. The President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. These men are under his control and supervision. I find here that within the last year the President of the United States, exercising his authority and his prerogatives, made a distinguished officer a major-general of the army. If these gentlemen had the distinguished service in the civil war or elsewhere that some men would try to make us believe, does anyone believe that the President would have ingored the distinguished services of these men? Now, what were their distinguished services in the civil war? One was a private soldier for about four or five months. How many private soldiers were there in the civil war? Two million two hundred and thirteen thousand. I say that there were 2,200,000 men in the civil war as volunteers who did as much as the one man whom the gentleman now seeks here to make a major-general. [Applause.] What do these men draw to-day—these volunteers? Twelve dollars a month. What is this man drawing to-day, if he goes out as a brigadier-general? Three hundred and seventy-five dollars a month.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRINCE. For a question only.

Mr. SULZER. I do not want to embarrass my friend, but I would like to know if it is not a fact that the gentleman voted for the act of March 2, 1907?

Mr. PRINCE. I did not, and I fought it on the floor of the House. No, sir; I did not. Whether I acted wisely or not, I do not believe in turning the army into a set of politicians. I believe the army officers should be obedient to their superiors. If there is any place that politics ought to be kept out of, it is the Army of the United States. [Applause.] A bill like this amendment the Senate sent to the Secretary of War under date—let me read you, and I got it from the War Department this morning:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 10, 1910.

December 28, 1909, Senate Committee on Military Affairs referred for report Senate bill 4573, Sixty-first Congress, second session [by Mr. GUGGENHEIM], a bill to adjust and equalize retirements, rank, and pay of veterans of the civil war who may be serving as brigadier-generals on the active list of the army January 1, 1910.

January 5, 1910, memorandum from the Adjutant-General's office to the Chief of Staff is as follows:

"States that if the bill should be changed to correspond with its title, the officers who would be benefited are Generals Thomas, Morton, Hodges, Brush, and Marshall, all of whom have had forty years of service or more, including enlisted service, and more than one year's service each as brigadier-general. The provisions of the bill, without reference to its title, would benefit the officers named and, in addition thereto, two other officers, namely, Colonel Clem, Quartermaster's Department, and Colonel Allison, Subsistence Department, if appointed brigadier-generals one year before retirement. In this connection, invites attention to a report of his office of December 14 on Senate bill 3548, Sixty-first Congress, second session, which is similar to this bill in its provisions, but which requires service of more than forty years as a commissioned officer."

This bill was presented to the Secretary of War, who stands for the President as the Commander in Chief of the Army. Now, what does he say?

The bill was returned to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, January 15, 1910, with the following indorsement:

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

There appears to be no justification, in the opinion of the department, for the passage of the within bill and adverse action thereon is therefore recommended.

J. M. DICKINSON,
Secretary of War.

Ought not that to satisfy everybody?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. I will.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Does that letter refer to the provision that is in this bill?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; to a like provision. A bill even better than this amendment, because that bill would not permit many cadets at West Point to be made hereafter major-generals. This amendment, if passed, would make hereafter many cadets who were in West Point as students during the time of the civil war major-generals. How many I do not know, but quite a number.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understood that bill embraced two others; that this bill embraces five, whereas the other embraced seven.

Mr. PRINCE. Now, what is the provision? Let me read you the provision under discussion:

Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, extend the proviso contained under the heading "Retired officers" in the act making appropriations for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, approved March 2, 1907, so as to include any officer who served creditably in the regular or volunteer forces of the United States during the civil war.

The courts have held that a cadet at West Point who was there one day before the war closed served creditably in the regular forces of the United States. Do you want to have a bill that will permit cadets at West Point, who happened to go there before the war closed and were there in the lower classes as fourth class students and afterwards graduated, who served creditably in the regular or volunteer forces of the United States Army one day——

Mr. SULZER. Just a word. I know the gentleman does not intend to mislead the House.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not. Well, my time is running; put your question.

Mr. SULZER. I will just make it very short. Does not the gentleman think that he can trust the President of the United States to do justice in this matter?

Mr. PRINCE. I can; I think the President of the United States has spoken upon this matter. I do not believe that it is the prerogative of this House or of Congress to tell the President how he shall promote or retire the officers over whom, under the Constitution and under his oath, he is Commander in Chief. I do not believe we have any right to say to any commanding officer, take this man and promote him, or some other man, and——

Mr. SULZER. I would say——

Mr. PRINCE. And which commanding officer has acted—who has given his views on this proposition——

Mr. SULZER (continuing). That I would leave it to the President, it is now discretionary with the President, and that is the difference between myself and the gentleman.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. SULZER. I am willing to trust the President in this matter and the gentleman is not.

Mr. PRINCE. The President has spoken. Here is his word, through the Secretary of War, that there is no merit in this provision:

There appears to be no justification, in the opinion of the department, for the passage of the within bill, and adverse action thereon is therefore recommended.

J. M. DICKINSON,
Secretary of War.

I want to say to the gentlemen of the House that if measures of this kind are passed by Congress the army ceases to be an army; it becomes a body of men who are seeking promotion at the expense of the Government, in spite of the War Department, in spite of the President, in spite of their own obligation of obedience. It is disorganizing the army; it is creating insubordination, and it is the worst thing that can come to the army; and as a friend of the army I ask this House to stand with the committee and further insist upon this provision. Not only that, but it is making lobbyists of generals of distinguished rank, who had better be putting in their time and efforts for the good of the service. [Applause.]

Now, let us see how many there are. There are 4,670 officers in the United States Army to-day on the active list. Why make congressional favorites of four or five officers as against the 4,670 that are performing their duties? Why encourage insubordination? Let all officers be obedient as soldiers and obey the directions of the Commander in Chief, obey the directions of the War Department, instead of coming around in this way to get the promotion, which the War Department says they are not entitled to and that there is no foundation in fact or in reason for.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How many are on the retired list now?

Mr. PRINCE. A great number; over 1,000 in all. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for a vote on my motion that the House further insist on its disagreement. I ask the previous question on the motions that are now pending.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, my motion, I think, takes precedence.

Mr. PRINCE. But I move the previous question on pending motions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] moves that the House do recede and concur.

Mr. SULZER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement with the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 131.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused; five Members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to adhere.

The SPEAKER. The previous question covers the motion that the House do further insist. That will have to be disposed of before the motion to adhere would be in order.

Mr. PRINCE. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House do further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees:

Mr. HULL of Iowa, Mr. PRINCE, and Mr. SULZER.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report (No. 670) on the bill (H. R. 18006) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18006) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments in line 18, page 4, and line 12, on page 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate in lines 10 to 12, inclusive, on page 5, and in line 4, page 6, and line 6, page 6, and agree to the same.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
WM. H. DRAPER,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. MCCUMBER,
N. B. SCOTT,
JAS. P. TALIAFERRO,

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate in line 6, page 6, the case of Charles F. Brown. The House did not fix any rate, and the Senate made a rate of $12 per month.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, striking out all of lines 10 to 12, on page 5, the case of John D. Smith, in which the House allowed a rate of $30 per month.

WM. H. DRAPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20579) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I would like to arrange for a very limited general debate. We ought to pass this bill this afternoon.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the opinion of the gentleman that we ought to do so, and I think we will pass it this afternoon, but there is some little demand for the privilege of debate on this side of the House. I would like to ask the gentleman what he thinks would be a reasonable time in which to gratify that aspiration?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] that the gentleman for whom he wishes to arrange time suggested that he could get through in thirty minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understood him to say thirty-five minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in thirty minutes, all the time to be occupied on the Democratic side.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable to me.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed on the bill in thirty minutes, all the time to be consumed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20579, the Military Academy appropriation bill, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20579) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, we are all familiar with the old-time doctrine that there is a time and place for all things, that righteousness availeth much, and that gratitude and honor speaketh in acts rather than in words. Under the inspiration of these established guides to right and reason, I hope that what I am about to say to you may be words uttered in the loftiest sense of patriotism, gratitude, and justice that it may be given me to express.

If there ever was a time and a place where a representative of a great and progressive people might consistently discuss ways and means to higher and happier civilization and obligation to those who sacrificed health and happiness in behalf of our common weal, it is here in this forum of our Republic.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I want to briefly present some ideas on two important topics of public concern, viz, a policy of peace for the future and a full measure of regard to those who answered their country's call in the past.

I notice with regret that a proposition is meeting favorable consideration at the hands of certain military authorities to induce military organization in our public schools and to equip schoolboys with guns for rifle practice that they may learn to kill. This would vastly increase our already enormous expense of nearly $350,000,000 per year for making ready for wars that are nowhere threatened; but the cost in money is inconsequential in comparison with the mistake of teaching the schoolboys of this Christian country to grow up trained to kill their fellow-man.

What a dreadful thing is war! It not only goes into your homes and takes the father or the son, or both of them, and sends them to human slaughter pens, frequently in distant lands, but it subjects those who escape deadly bullets to a blight of hardship and exposure that disables most of them in vigorous manhood all the remaining days of their lives.

Wars, like personal encounters between men, are not an infallible guide to justice, because superior strength does not make surely for right, and the rational sentiment of to-day is anxious to take differences of nations to international tribunals of arbitration as individuals have learned to settle their conflicts of honor and of property rights in courts of justice rather than by the barbarous method of other years of superiority of personal strength and brutality. Most certainly our advanced civilization should lead the world to the high plane of humanity where peaceful means of adjusting differences shall forever supplant the customs of the savages to indulge in deadly combat as court of highest resort.

Far be it from my purpose to discourage defense of country by force of arms if an emergency be thrust upon us, or the training of officers for such an emergency. But I deprecate the policy of promiscuous training of fighters, for such open indication that we want to fight simply invites challenges from others who believe fighting a national glory. Moreover, the justifiable and the most determined fighting spirit is the stalwart patriotism of the volunteer who shoulders arms in defense of right, and for this class of invincible patriots our country has never called in vain in a time of national peril.

We teach our sons to be tolerant, fair, charitable, and merciful; why urge them at the same time to drill and manipulate murderous war implements? We teach them to applaud the upliftment of mankind above the level of barbarism and then to cheer rather than weep when the soldier boys march by to fields of battle, there to enter contests as to which side can pile the dead and wounded in largest heaps.

Last Christmas time our own country celebrated the anniversary of Him who came from On High with a proclamation of "Peace on earth, good will to men," with praise services in a hundred thousand churches while we had 200,000 men armed, equipped, and many of them drawing salaries from our Public Treasury to spread destruction and misery by shot and shell if ordered so to do. That great and lamented humanitarian, Edward Everett Hale, never said truer words than his recent utterance:

> We have a Secretary of War; what we need is a secretary of peace, a secretary of peace with liberal appropriation, whose duty it shall be to promote measures of peace through our foreign relations, our schools and colleges, and every other possible means of preventing wars.

Our future governors, Congressmen, Senators, and Presidents are schoolboys now and most of them Sunday-school attendants. They are the coming statesmen who will have to do with war and peace questions in the future. How shall we train them, for war or for peace?

I recently asked that gallant old military hero and soldiers' friend, General SHERWOOD, of Toledo, what he thought of the bill which proposes to authorize rifle practice in public-school athletic leagues for the purpose of teaching boys how to shoot and kill, so they may be in training for war, and his reply was:

> I will answer you as I recently did General Wingate, of New York, who solicited me to support the bill. As a believer in the benign doctrine of the Prince of Peace, I can not see my duty in supporting the bill. In fact, I shall oppose it, and all that class of legislation, to the best of my efforts. We are already educating too many young men for war. The army and navy are this year taking over 65 per cent of all the net expenses of the Government—taken from the earnings of the toiling masses in onerous and unjust taxation. The safety and future security of this Republic, in my judgment, is in patriotic hearts and homes and not in professional soldiers trained to kill for hire. Evidently your idea is that our present civilization is a muscular struggle of the strong against the weak, in which, so to speak, thousands are to be shot down that heroes of gun and sword, dripping in blood, may dance upon their bellies.
> Without the deadly gun element your proposed athletic league for schools is all right; but "the Old Flag with an appropriation" is very busy now with the government revenues, and it is no part of the duty of the General Government to appropriate money to promote local athletic clubs. If we have money to spare, I favor an appropriation for shoes for the shoeless and hats for the hatless and some well-distributed coin comfort for those in desperation and despair. You evidently believe, with the majority, that the best way to avoid war is to always be ready with an army of trained warriors. I do not share this view. I do not believe that peace among the canine tribe would be promoted should every man breed and train a fighting bulldog. But I heartily commend your league without the deadly gun element. Young men to achieve any good of value must have healthy bodies to sustain and promote healthy minds. Here is a good motto to hang on the walls of your athletic league. It is worth more to young men than rifles and accurate rifle shots. George Washington says:
> "My first wish is to see this plague of mankind—war—banished from the earth and the sons and daughters of this world employed in more pleasing and innocent amusements than in preparing implements and exercising them for the destruction of mankind."

Mr. Chairman, all that I have submitted so far is merely introductory to the more important petition that I now earnestly present. The mention of the name of General SHERWOOD is at once suggestive of the greater obligation we owe the decrepit and disabled old soldiers, who sacrificed time and energy and health, that our glorious country might survive and achieve matchless triumph of national greatness and goodness in the world's history. He it was who formally and forcefully suggested in Congress that a dollar a day for honorably discharged veterans should be the minimum obligation we owe the old soldier, and I want to heartily indorse his admirable munificence in insisting that this wealthy Nation shall generously provide for those who cared for it in its time of need, now that it is amply able to do so.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if he has ever seen a bill such as a dollar a day for all civil war veterans? Was there ever any such bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD]?

Mr. BARNHART. I understand so.

Mr. KEIFER. I never saw one of that kind.

Mr. BARNHART. For every one that has served more than ninety days?

Mr. KEIFER. I never saw one of that kind.

Mr. BARNHART. What is his bill?

Mr. KEIFER. I will read part of it. It is to pension at a dollar a day those who served for ninety days, whose physical and mental condition is of such degree of disability as to require periodical care and attention of another person.

Mr. BARNHART. Very well; I refer to his first and preferred bill.

And by way of introduction of this subject, I here submit one of many petitions I have had from Grand Army of the Republic posts, individual veterans, and civilians of my district:

> GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC, DEPARTMENT OF INDIANA,
> LAFAYETTE GORDON POST, No. 132,
> Argos, Ind., August 2, 1909.
> Hon. H. A. BARNHART,
> Member of Congress, Rochester, Ind.
> DEAR SIR: Your attention is respectfully invited to the following:
> At the thirtieth annual session of the Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, held at Crawfordsville, May 19–21, 1909, the following was introduced and adopted by the state encampment:
> "Whereas under the present rate of pensions a large majority of ex-Union soldiers and sailors are only receiving pensions from $6 to $15 per month, which is insufficient for their comfortable support; and
> "Whereas said insufficient pensions and the increasing age and infirmities of pensioners are forcing them in large numbers away from their families and friends and into soldiers' homes, where they not only continue to draw their pensions in full, but are supported at great expense to the Government; and
> "Whereas under the present system of disbursing pensions and of holding examinations of pensioners by medical boards and investigating claims by numerous private pension examiners, the expenses of the Pension Department are almost, if not quite, equal to the amount now being paid to pensioners: Therefore be it

Mr. Chairman, the sentiment of these resolutions is, in a large measure, the voice of the citizenship of the country. If there is one person among the 300,000 people in the district I represent who is opposed to this substantial good will to old soldiers I never heard it outspoken. Of course there is general agreement that this shall be done without additional burdens of taxation, and that it can be done by just a little retrenchment here and there is a premise beyond question.

Why, only the other day, the acknowledged leader of the Senate, the statesman whom President Taft recently characterized as the wisest financial legislator in the country, declared he could run the Government as efficiently as is now done at a saving of $300,000,000 per year. If this be true, and the Senator never speaks recklessly, it would require an insignificant per cent of this saving to pay the old soldiers deserved pensions and free them from the embarrassment that the present pension policy inflicts upon them. Hundreds of thousands of dollars—yea, millions—of unnecessary expense could be saved to deserving old soldiers if they could be placed on a fixed pension basis which would pay them just dues without subjecting them to the expensive "red-tape" system that now prevails.

Let me give you some figures of startling proportions. The specified total appropriation for the army this year, as shown by the digest of appropriations issued by the Treasury Department, is $189,792,339.48, plus $11,344,543.48 of pending appropriations of previous years. The report of the Secretary of War shows 76,049 enlisted men and officers in the United States Army. Dividing the army appropriation for this year by the number of men actually in the service we find an average expense for each United States soldier, including incidental equipment, of $2,495.06 per year, less than 16 per cent of which, according to unofficial estimate, goes to the salary and keep of the men in the ranks. The total appropriation for expense of the navy, as shown by the digest of appropriations, will be $138,560,879.05, plus $2,281,878.31 of pending appropriations of previous years and plus, possibly, a proposed $22,000,000 more for two additional battle ships. The report of the Secretary of the Navy shows a total of 55,548 enlisted men in the service. Dividing the estimated cost of the navy proper by the number of men in the service, as in the army, we find that the average cost of each man per year is $2,494.43, the same meager per cent of which goes to the "men behind the guns" as to those in the army.

Comparing the average annual expense of each man in the navy with that of each man in the army, we find the remarkable difference of 63 cents. Do you see any evidence in these figures that the army and navy heads use the same pencil and the same sheet of paper to reach their conclusions of how much money each wants to spend in his department? Is there any significance in this circumstance that they agreed to ask for the same proportionate amount of money, and, in the language of the Hoosier Schoolmaster's old Mrs. Means, "Git a plenty while you're gittin'?"

I do not give this citation merely to raise a question of design on the part of the Army and Navy departments to raid the National Treasury. I do it for the purpose of comparing our expenditures for equipment and soldiers who, God grant, may never encounter war, with what we are doing for the old veterans who have already preserved the glory and the beneficence of our Republic.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that we have a total of 946,194 soldiers, soldiers' widows, and soldiers' dependents on the pension rolls for the present year, and that we are paying them pensions amounting to a total of $164,826,287.50. Dividing this amount by the number of pensioners, and we find that we are paying the old veterans and their dependents an average of $174.19 per year. Put this alongside the $2,500 per year cash we are paying for the annual average expense of our enlisted men of to-day and tell me if we are giving the old soldier justice.

But most unfair of all, we are not giving the old soldier justly of the amount of pension money the bulk figures I have quoted show. Out of this total the Pension Bureau paid last year to 25,399 lawyers the sum of $321,237.86, and how much more the old soldiers paid in attorney and clerical expenses in trying to get just claims allowed no man could possibly surmise. In addition to this the Pension Bureau paid out of the old soldiers total pension fund the sum of $243,262.57 for fees of official examining surgeons. And there was paid out for almost wholly unnecessary branch pension agencies expenses $502,463.30. Add to these outlays such others as the personal expenses of old soldiers in taking official examinations, cost of special examinations, loss of time in Congress and necessary clerical expense of special pension bill legislation, and so forth, and it is easy to understand why the old soldier and the people generally protest that the pension system of the country is costing millions of expense out of the pension fund each year that ought to be going to the deserving and decrepit soldiers to whom this money justly belongs. Furthermore, if we would give the old soldiers a dollar a day pension, thousands and thousands of them now in state and national soldiers' homes, which cost millions every year, would be glad to save the country the expense of their keeping therein and go back home to relatives and friends to enjoy their decline in the midst of environ of the joys of days of blessed memory.[a]

Think a moment. If the rate of compensation fixed as just pension for soldiers in years gone by was based on justice, what of present conditions? Living expenses are a third, and in many instances a half, higher than formerly, and advancing age and increasing disabilities have reduced the veterans' earning capacity in like and even greater proportion. And think, also; the old soldier does not ask nor expect the country for which he risked his life in war at $11 and $13 per month to give him luxury. He asks only assurance of food, clothing, and shelter to make less dreary his pathway of old age. And this modest petition for a bare living is commendable and conclusive evidence that he wants no reward for his sacrifices for our country's glory except that benign care in life's sunset that shall soften its deepening shadows—a guaranty that he shall not suffer material want nor the awful misfortune of becoming dependent on charity.

Mr. Chairman, heeding both financial and patriotic exigencies, the time is here when we should add to the praiseworthy salute to the old soldier of "Glory be thy name" the more substantial badge of gratitude—peace and comfort be thy portion. [Long applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The chief surgeon of the post at the Military Academy, whose rank shall not be below that of lieutenant-colonel, shall, in addition to his duties as chief surgeon, discharge the duties of professor of military hygiene.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on line 1, page 3, by striking out the words "chief surgeon" and inserting the words "senior medical officer;" and in line 3 strike out the word "chief."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 1, page 3, strike out "chief surgeon" and insert "senior medical officer;" and in line 3 strike out the word "chief."

Mr. KEIFER. Why do you desire to make that change?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no chief surgeon.

Mr. KEIFER. There has not been?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There has not been; it is simply by request of the medical officer that I offer this change.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of seven instructors of cavalry, artillery, and infantry tactics (captains), in addition to pay as second lieutenants, not mounted, $4,900.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 20, by striking out the words "not mounted." I will say to the committee that these words have been carried for a great many years, but under the law passed recently the pay of army officers has been made uniform, and they get the same regardless of whether they are in the cavalry or the infantry, so that the words are not necessary, and I move to strike them out.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows.

Twelve enlisted musicians, at $45 per month, $6,490.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 4, line 22, by striking out the word "ninety" and inserting the word "eighty." It is an error of computation.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows.

One hundred and two privates, $15,912.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, on page 7, lines 5 and 6, there is an error made, which I desire to correct. Strike out "fifteen," in line 5, and insert "eighteen;" strike out "nine," in line 5, and insert "three;" and in line 6 strike out "twelve" and insert "sixty."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, lines 5 and 6, amend so as to read "$18,360."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of 4 enlisted men as printers, at headquarters United States Military Academy, at 50 cents each per day, $620.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 4, after the word "men," by inserting the word "employed." I will state that I will make several of these motions, for the reason that, while this language has been carried exactly now as always heretofore, the Senate has got to making technical amendments that we really have to agree to, and I think it makes it a little fuller, for instance, to say "employed as printers." We do this to avoid the necessity of agreeing to some technical amendments when the bill comes back from the Senate. I move to insert the word "employed" after the word "men."

[a] There are 40 national and state soldiers' homes; 34,565 veterans live within them; the annual cost of maintaining these homes is $8,000,000; the amount invested in the property is $19,000,000; and the approximate cost of each soldier in the homes is $20 per month, this in addition to any pension he receives.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How are these men employed if they are enlisted?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There are a large number of men whom it is the custom to enlist for the different trades, and the law provides the compensation they shall have while doing this extra-duty service. In other words, the authorities there claim that the labor costs them a great deal less by enlisting the men. They enlist as privates, with the understanding that they shall be employed as printers, with the understanding that they will be employed in the printing office. They also enlist men for carpenters and different trades, and then they are a part of the army, and the law fixes the compensation that they are to have while doing this duty.

Mr. HINSHAW. How much do they get as enlisted men?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They get $15 a month for first year of enlistment.

Mr. KEIFER. It occurs to me, if the chairman will permit me, that the word "employed" should be after the word "printers," in line 4, if it be true, as stated, that it relates to enlisted men who are printers employed at headquarters.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I think the gentleman is wrong. It is for pay of four enlisted men employed as printers.

Mr. KEIFER. That would indicate enlistment was for some other purpose?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are enlisted exactly as any other men are enlisted. They are persuaded to enlist with the understanding that they will get this work, and they keep faith with them, and employ such a number by detaching that number of men to this duty, and give them the extra-duty pay.

Mr. KEIFER. Are these men enlisted as private soldiers in the army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Are they required to perform duty as soldiers unless they are employed to do this special work?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They would be, and then they would not get their extra-duty pay.

Mr. KEIFER. Then my suggestion, I think, was not right; but I supposed from the explanation that was being made that they were enlisted for certain purposes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Their enlistment does not read that they are enlisted as printers. They are enlisted like any other men, but they are assigned to this duty. There is no law by which they could be enlisted as printers, and if there was a law of that kind, there would be no extra-duty pay, but there would be specific pay provided for that. As it is now, they are enlisted as private soldiers, with the understanding that they are to work as printers and receive extra pay for it.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it possible that there is such a thing as an enlistment as a private soldier, with a private understanding that they are not to perform the ordinary duties of private soldiers, but that they are to be detailed for extra work as printers, or some other work?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think that is true at West Point; and I want to say to the gentleman that of course if they were not competent to discharge such duty, there is nothing in their enlistment that would not assign them to other duty; but they would not reenlist; while now they have a permanent force that they keep right along that are valuable to the Government and satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Mr. KEIFER. Are they enlisted for three years?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I ask the gentleman why, on page after page of this bill, we have the expression, "For extra pay?" Are these men on the rolls for any given amount?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then, why do you perpetuate the policy here year after year of giving extra pay? Why do you not put in an increased amount of money for them at once and be done with it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are all paid as enlisted men, paid as privates, corporals, or sergeants; but there is a general provision of law that in some lines of extra duty they get 50 cents a day extra and in others 35 cents a day extra, outside of their pay as enlisted men. At West Point they have a cavalry detachment, an ordnance detachment, and four or five other detachments, all of them separate; so it looks like a repetition of appropriations, but each is for a separate detachment. The law does not provide for enlisting men at more than the regular pay, but if they perform certain work, then the law fixes the amount of extra pay that they receive, so you have got to give the extra pay in each separate item. Take, for instance, the artillery. You get extra pay in that for certain lines, and so in other branches of the army.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It does not look well to the public, and it can not look very well to Members of the House, to see so much extra pay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say to my friend that a large proportion of the appropriation for the Military Academy is for extra pay for these men. They do extra work and receive extra pay for it, but you save the pay of carpenters and of other skilled artisans, and also save the trouble and annoyance of keeping a civilian force there at higher wages. You save the pay of printers and you save the pay of all kinds of skilled mechanics and get the work done for a good deal less than the wages of civilians would be.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. My point is this: Could you not in this bill or some other bill organize the Military Academy force so as to have no provisions for extra pay?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not see how you can.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Give them enough in the first instance, so that there will be no necessity for appropriating for extra pay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then you will give them a great deal more than you do now. Whenever you pay men specifically as printers and not as soldiers, you will have to pay them more. Besides, under the present law, if it turns out that an enlisted man is not satisfactory in one of these special lines, if he can not do the work to which he is assigned, then he may be sent back to perform the duties of an ordinary enlisted man for the term of his enlistment. A man may say, "I am a good printer." They enlist him as a private soldier and assign him to work as a printer. If he does not do satisfactory work as a printer, then he can be set to performing the duties of an ordinary enlisted man. If they could enlist a man as a printer and he was not a good printer, then he could not be set to doing anything else, and they would have to carry a worthless man on the rolls during the remainder of his term of enlistment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 4, after the word "men," insert the word "employed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of one ordnance soldier as draftsman and lithographic printer, at 50 cents per day, $156.50.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, page 10, after the word "men," insert the word "employed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of two enlisted men as messengers in the office of the adjutant, United States Military Academy, at 35 cents each per day, $219.10.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move the same amendment in line 16, page 10, after the word "men," insert the word "employed."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, page 10, after the word "men," insert the word "employed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one clerk to the quartermaster, $1,200.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make an inquiry of the chairman as to the reason why clerks to the disbursing officer, the adjutant, and the clerk to the treasurer and the clerk to the quartermaster are paid different amounts by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the clerk to the adjutant and the clerk to the treasurer receive the same amount that has been fixed heretofore; they are old clerks, been there a long time, and very efficient. The clerk to the quartermaster should be paid $1,500, because his duties are just as onerous as the duties of the clerk to the adjutant, but the committee believed that any attempt to increase the salary of a clerk would be met with a point of order, and therefore did not raise the salary of this clerk. It was requested by the superintendent in the hearings. He requested a raise of salary also for the professors of foreign languages, but we did not raise any salaries.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no doubt that the duties of the clerk to the quartermaster are quite as responsible as the clerk to the treasurer, but under the circumstances and the statement as made by the gentleman from Iowa I will not make any motion, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingencies for superintendent of the academy, $2,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 5, after the word "dollars," strike out the colon and insert a semicolon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a course of lectures for the more complete instruction of cadets, $1,200.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph to call attention of the chairman of the committee to the language used there.

For a course of lectures for the more complete instruction of cadets, $1,200.

That does not explain itself, and some of us are not advised as to what sort of a course of lectures could be had for the more complete instruction of cadets, and if it is a full course, why it should be done so cheaply as it is proposed to do it here, at a cost of only $1,200.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, some years ago Congress provided for a course of lectures outside of those delivered by the regular professors and instructors at the academy. These cadets are confined to the reservations during their entire time, practically, and it is not possible for them to go to New York or to any of the surrounding cities when learned lectures are delivered by distinguished men. The faculty and the Board of Visitors united in the belief that with a small appropriation they could get the benefit of a great many lectures on scientific and other subjects of public interest, and it has worked admirably.

A great many of the finest educators of the country who are delivering their lectures in the East will go there almost solely for their expenses to help out the cadets. They wanted $2,000. We started it at a small sum, and it has worked so well that there has never been a suggestion made that it ought to be changed. The gentleman from Ohio will readily understand that students at Harvard, Yale, or any of the large institutions of learning are free to go off from time to time if there is anything of great interest in that immediate neighborhood and get advantage of this additional instruction. The cadet at West Point can not do that, and we have by this means brought to him a larger education, a broadening of his curriculum, and with great benefit to the service.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what is said by the chairman. Formerly I had charge of this Military Academy bill, many years ago, and I do not recall that we had any such appropriations. I think the explanation is very satisfactory. It is quite important that the cadets at the Military Academy and the midshipmen at the Naval Academy, for that matter, should have as good general instruction as is possible to be given to the best students and learned persons of this country, and therefore if it can be obtained in this way, in part at least, I think it is quite proper that the appropriation should be made. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one double set of quarters for civilian employees, to be built in the vicinity of the workshops and storehouses, $10,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that item.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wants to be heard on the point of order, I want to say that I do not believe it is subject to a point of order. It is a part of the current work. We have always had this line of work, and it is only a question in my mind whether we ought to appropriate the money now or not.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs contend that the construction of houses for civilian employees in the academy is not a new item, a new enterprise, and a new policy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is a new item, but we have had buildings for civilian employees heretofore. This is not the first one under that class of buildings that we have had.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Here it is proposed to construct the house for two plumbers to accommodate two families at an expense of $10,000. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is subject to a point of order, because it is a new item, and I am willing to leave it at that, for I am confident that the Chair will so rule.

Mr. HAY. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if he contends that this is a part of the scheme of building operations?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; none of these appropriations are part of that. That is an entirely different thing. Mr. Chairman, let me read from the hearings, on page 40. This item was up for consideration, and the following occurred:

Mr. PRINCE. "For one double set of quarters, for civilian employees, $10,000."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not that something new?

Colonel SCOTT. No, sir. In the act approved March 2, 1907, $6,000 was appropriated for this purpose. The estimate was based on rough plans for a frame building prepared six or seven years ago. As a frame structure would be out of harmony with the general improvements in the vicinity mentioned, plans were prepared for a brick building with slate roof. Though kept down to a minimum in size and accommodations, all the bids received after due advertisement in May, 1908, were so much in excess of the appropriation that it was found impossible to modify the plan sufficiently to secure erection of the building within the limits of the money available. It was therefore allowed to be returned to the Treasury unused at the end of the fiscal year.

It has been appropriated for. This is a larger amount. It is in the line of economy, they claim, to have quarters for civilians, so that they will not be compelled to go outside of the reservation at night, so that the employees will always be in reach of the authorities day or night, especially the plumbers and that class of civilians who ought to be on the ground all the time. They may be called for at midnight; and yet if they have not quarters there they have to go down to a little town 3 or 4 miles from there, and Congress has appropriated for this specific item once before. It was allowed to go back into the Treasury for the reason that there was not a sufficient amount appropriated to buildings they desired to erect.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, that appropriation was in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It was in the Military Academy bill, where a building for the Military Academy was carried.

Mr. GARRETT. But that did not make it permanent law, did it?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the fact that it was in an appropriation bill does not help the case. The fact that there was an appropriation which has since been turned into the Treasury does not make this in order now. This is a new project, for the purpose of building a house for civilian employees. It is not part of the project of building up the plant at the West Point Military Academy, nor do I understand the chairman of the committee to point out any law authorizing the building of houses for civilian employees at the Military Academy. I do not understand that there are any such houses there. This is the first time it is proposed to build such a house there, and the beginning of a system which, if followed, will result in building buildings there for every civilian employee employed at the Military Academy, and I do not think it is supported by any law or any rule of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order. This is a matter of great concern to all those who are interested in the academy. It is work that will have to be done sooner or later, and it seems that the plumbers and others live at Highland Falls, a great distance away, and there might be a greater damage done in not having them within quick and easy reach than the cost of the entire appropriation, because of their living at so remote a distance that they could not be reached in time of an emergency.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have heard all the arguments that possibly could be advanced in support of this building at the academy. I have heard it discussed at some length. It begins a policy of erecting residences for civilian employees, an unwise policy, in my judgment. When you propose to expend $10,000 to construct a brick or stone house, as the case may be, for plumbers and their families, I think we are starting a scale of extravagance which, if not checked, will result in an outlay unwarranted by law and undesirable in fact. I shall insist, Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in the act of 1907 Congress did appropriate for a double set of civilian quarters $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. It seems to the Chair that it is a very close question as to whether this is a continuation of a public work or not. However, the attention of the Chair has been called to a precedent in a former Military Academy bill:

On January 12, 1889, the House was in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering the Military Academy appropriation bill. A section of the bill was read providing for the erection of a fireproof building on the grounds of the Military Academy at West Point. Mr. C. B. Kilgore, of Texas, made the point of order that the building had not been authorized by law.

After debate, the Chairman ruled:

"The Chair decides that, within the meaning of the provision just read, the building proposed to be erected—fireproof building on site of public grounds at West Point—is within the purview of the rule. The construction of a building is an incident to the maintenance of the academy itself, the object being already in progress—the main object contemplated, not only by the bill, but by the very institution of the academy itself."

In view of this decision, the Chair feels bound——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair announces his ruling on that I want to submit that I do not think that the contention will be made by anyone that this is a part of the development of the academy that was contemplated by law, nor that it is essential to the academy, because we have the plumbers now.

We have an academy at which things are going on in a very fairly satisfactory condition now without this building, and it is not an essential part of it, nor was it contemplated by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, however, is unable to draw a distinction between a fireproof building and this building, which is apparently——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will ask the Chair for what purpose was that fireproof building erected?

The CHAIRMAN. The precedent I have quoted does not disclose the purpose. It says simply "a fireproof building."

Mr. SLAYDEN. An academy building would be part of the academy, and properly in the bill, or a building for the accommodation of the cadets, or a riding hall, or anything that is essential for the development and maintenance of the academy or the training of cadets, but this is not, and there is no contention that it is or that it has ever been.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to say that the authorities there claim that it is exceedingly important that certain of the civilian employees should be there, and they instanced the plumbers and others in the hearings and talks we have had with them in former years. They might need them immediately, and would have to go 3 miles away to get them, and there would be a long delay and great damage by not having them there at the time. They claim it is essential for the academy that these buildings should be erected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not feel that he can draw a distinction between this building and the building covered by this precedent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The attention of the Chair is respectfully invited to the fact that, under such a ruling, any sort of building for any sort of purpose almost, that the officers of the Military Academy thought would be desirable to be erected could be provided. There would be no protection for the Treasury or the people.

Mr. KEIFER. If it was thought by Congress it was proper for the maintenance of that institution, would not that be right?

Mr. SLAYDEN. They ought not to go outside of the well-defined purpose of the law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think we are going outside of the purpose of the law. We might say that the Naval Committee should not recommend more than one battle ship, and they would bring in provision for four, but it does not necessarily follow that Congress would pass it. This is part of the Military Academy.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If their business was to appropriate for battle ships and they brought in an appropriation for automobiles or transports even——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is for the maintenance of the academy.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] says this is necessary for the maintenance of the academy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I say that is the statement of the academic board and all who appeared before us, and Congress recognized it was necessary in 1897 by making appropriation.

The authorities at West Point let that appropriation go back to the Treasury because they could not erect a suitable building for the amount given to them, although they had the amount asked at that time, as I remember it. It is just as much a part of the necessary building, in my judgment, of the academy as buildings for officers; in some respects more important. It is a part of the scheme of the completed academy there to have the necessary civilian employees kept on the grounds, where their labor can be utilized to protect the interest of the academy. If a steam pipe bursts, a plumber can go there and repair it, instead of waiting for hours until the authorities can go and get a man there from Highland Falls. A water pipe may burst on them, and steam boilers might get out of order. They have got to have some of these higher-class civilians on the grounds all the time, because their work is too important for the Government to waste time to send to the village for them.

Mr. HAY. In the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs there is no evidence from anybody that this is necessary for the maintenance of the Military Academy. I understood that to be the question that the Chair asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps not necessary, but for the use of the academy. It seems to the Chair that that would be for the committee to decide.

Mr. HAY. There is no evidence here that it is for the use of the academy. This building will be for the use of plumbers who are employed at the Military Academy. The Government, in other words, will be furnishing a building for these civilian employees.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair will ask the gentleman from Virginia if that would not be for the use of the academy?

Mr. HAY. Well, it would be for the use of the academy, if you are going to carry that argument to the point of saying that every civilian employed at the academy must have a house furnished to him. If that is true, then every carpenter and every blacksmith, and everybody else employed on the grounds there must have a house furnished him, because he himself is used by the academy.

You may say that you could furnish them clothing. Now they proposed to put an appropriation in this bill for an organ in the chapel. And it could be said with as much certainty as it can be said about this item that this organ was for the use of the Military Academy. But I believe it would be recognized on all hands that an appropriation of $10,000 for an organ would be subject to the point of order. So much so that it is not put in the bill. I do not see, if the Chair pleases, how it is possible to stop this if once it is begun. If you put up a building for the plumbers, you must have one for everyone else.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will allow me, the title of the bill is "to make appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes." Is it not fair to assume that in this case this building is to be specifically for the use of the academy?

Mr. HAY. It does not follow that every item put in this bill is for the good of the academy.

Mr. KEIFER. Undoubtedly every item is intended for the successful development of the Military Academy; otherwise it is not properly in the bill.

Mr. HAY. It might not be for the support of the Military Academy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is for one double set of quarters for civilian employees, to be built in the vicinity of the workshop and storehouses. What workshops and storehouses? Of the Military Academy?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What employees? The civilian employees. Of what? Of the Military Academy.

Mr. HAY. Well, it does not follow because the language of the bill makes a statement of that sort that therefore it makes it in order. If that were true, any item in any appropriation bill must necessarily be in order, according to the argument of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to know what, in the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia, will distinguish these particular employees from every other civilian employees at the academy? If this is in order, then would not the building of a village on the grounds at the Military Academy to house and accommodate all the civilian employees be in order?

Mr. HAY. That would be the result of this appropriation. If you put up a building for the plumber, then every other civilian employee will insist that he ought to have a building, and I must confess I do not see why he should not. If the plumber is to have a building to live in, I do not see why all the other civilian employees should not. I do not see any reason why there should be a distinction between them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It seems to me that is not a fair contention. We have the academy property, and the necessity is reported of having certain employees on the ground for the benefit of the academy, for the safety of the government property. It presents a different question to what the gentleman suggests of providing a different building for everybody employed there. If the committee should report as to any other employees, Congress can readily see whether or not it is necessary, and Congress would reject it if it decided it should not be provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. If this question were a new one, and presented for the first time on the Military Academy bill, the Chair would be inclined to agree with the gentleman from Texas; but inasmuch as it has been decided before that a building on the grounds of the Military Academy was a continuation of a public work, it being for the benefit of the Military Academy, the Chair feels constrained to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HAY. I do not care to say anything more; I think it has been brought out pretty fully what this is for.

Mr. GARRETT. I would like to ask the gentleman why is it this bill carries $10,000 when the bill of two years ago only carried $6,000?

Mr. HAY. Because the authorities of the academy claim that they want to put up a better building, one more in harmony with the buildings at West Point than $6,000 would build.

Mr. GARRETT. Is that why they allowed the appropriation to lapse?

Mr. HAY. That is why they allowed it to lapse.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For carrying on the development of the general plan for improvements to roads and grounds on the military reservation of West Point, designed under contract by authority of the Secretary of War, $3,000: Provided, That if it be found by the Secretary of War more advantageous and economical to do so, for the use of the United States Military Academy, the Secretary of War is authorized to purchase, at a price not to exceed $150,000, the buildings and grounds known as "Ladycliffe Academy," formerly Cranston's Hotel, adjacent to the Military Academy reservation, from the appropriation "For continuing the work of increasing the efficiency of the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., and to provide for the enlargement of buildings, and for other necessary work of improvement in connection therewith," authorized in acts of Congress approved June 28, 1902, April 28, 1904, March 3, 1905, and June 28, 1906, in accordance with the general plan approved by the Secretary of War January 27, 1904.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the proviso to that paragraph.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly subject to the point of order, but I will say to the committee that I hope my friend will withdraw it. The plan approved by Congress and adopted by the Secretary of War provides for a hotel to cost $225,000. The statement to us was that we would get this large amount of ground and a building ample for all hotel purposes, just outside of the academy, for $150,000, thereby saving the Government $75,000. The superintendent and all the authorities claim that it would be a great benefit for the Government to have this place just outside the gates, for the reason that they could then regulate the admission of the tourists to the grounds at West Point and avoid an immense amount of annoyance, confusion, and dirt by the automobiles coming through the grounds to the hotel. I think this is an economy and an advantage to the Government, and I hope my friend from Virginia will withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia make the point of order?

Mr. HAY. I do.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Of course it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20579) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 22643), and pending that, I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations at present has no work before it, having finished all the bills referred to it, and for the expedition of the public business it is quite important that this bill go there as soon as possible.

Immediately following this comes the pension appropriation bill, upon which there will be abundant opportunity for general debate. Therefore I ask unanimous consent, and suggest to my colleague, the ranking member of the committee on the minority side [Mr. LIVINGSTON], that general debate on this bill be limited to one hour, thirty minutes on a side.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think, Mr. Speaker, that if we concede the first proposition made by the gentleman in charge of the bill, the general debate which would naturally come on this bill ought to be allowed on the pension appropriation bill. If that can be understood, I have no objection. If it can be understood between myself and the chairman of the committee (and privately I have that assurance) that we may have four hours' general debate on this side on the pension bill and four hours on that side, that will be satisfactory. I have promised some time on this side of the House, and I must keep that promise; but if the time can be had on the pension appropriation bill, that will accomplish the purpose. I want to object to the gentleman's second proposition, that we have general debate on the legislative bill for one hour or for one minute.

Mr. GILLETT. I want to explain the bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The bill explains itself. There is no necessity for it. If the gentleman occupies half an hour and I occupy half an hour, then what right have we to object to other gentlemen occupying time?

Mr. GILLETT. We are discussing the bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You can not explain it in half an hour to save your life. This little report here contains every necessary item of explanation.

Mr. GILLETT. I am perfectly willing to give up my time, if that is the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks to waive all debate on the general appropriation bill?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to understand exactly what the gentleman suggests about debate on the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts in charge of the bill suggests that we close general debate now, and when the gentleman from Ohio brings in the pension bill, that we may have four hours on this side and four hours on the other side. Does the gentleman from Ohio agree to that?

Mr. KEIFER. I think four hours is enough for both sides.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We will have nothing at that time to do but to talk.

Mr. KEIFER. If it will give progress to this bill, I will not object.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, we will have no general debate on this bill, and when the pension bill comes up there will be four hours of general debate on this side and four hours on the other side.

Mr. GILLETT. That is the proposition, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. GILLETT was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 22643, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. General debate, by unanimous consent, has been closed.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the Members of the House that if they send for the report on this bill, they will find that it is very full and thoroughly explains every item in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Secretary: Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer of salaries of Senators and of the contingent fund of the Senate, $6,500; hire of horse and wagon for the Secretary's office, $420; assistant secretary, Henry M. Rose, $5,000; Chief Clerk, $3,250; financial clerk, $3,000, and $1,250 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; minute and journal clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $3,000 each; principal clerk, executive clerk, and assistant financial clerk, at $2,750 each; reading clerk, librarian, and clerk, compiling a history of revenue and general appropriation bills, at $2,500 each; keeper of stationery, $2,400; 5 clerks, at $2,220 each; 5 clerks, at $2,100 each; assistant librarian, $2,000; assistant librarian, $1,800; assistant librarian, $1,600; skilled laborer, $1,200; clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,600; assistant keeper of stationery, $1,800; assistant in stationery room, $1,000; messenger, $1,440; assistant messenger, $1,200; 6 laborers, at $720 each; in all, $84,930.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee the reason that the financial clerk is to be paid $1,200 additional while this particular clerk fills this position?

Mr. GILLETT. That, Mr. Chairman, is in the Senate. The custom is to allow each branch to fix without criticism of the other branch its own salaries. So we have paid no attention to that, and I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building, $18,480.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman in charge of the bill, what is included in this item on account of the Maltby Building?

Mr. GILLETT. That is the old office building of the Senate, and this committee and this House does not undertake to supervise the expenses of the Senate. We take their estimate and allow them to determine that for themselves.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is it the understanding of the committee that it will be necessary to maintain and keep up the Maltby Building now that the Senate Office Building is completed and occupied?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know what the purpose of the Senate is. We struck it out last year because it occurred to us that it was superfluous, but they insisted upon putting it back again.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me, I will say that the Senate is using it now for the Commission on Immigration, of which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is chairman. That is the chief use that the building is now being put to. The House has endeavored, as was stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, to get rid of the item, but we can not.

Mr. HAMMOND. The committee can not give any information as to when the use of the Maltby Building will be discontinued?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to say that this appropriation covers the pay of the doorkeeper and messengers, and so on. It comes out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and we are not permitted to open that book.

Mr. MANN. Out of the contingent expenses, but not out of the contingent fund.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Out of the contingent expenses.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, and for expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobile for the Vice-President, $50,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. "For miscellaneous items exclusive of labor and of expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobile for the Vice-President, $50,000." Can the gentleman from Massachusetts tell us what these miscellaneous items are and what they amount to?

Mr. GILLETT. It is just like our own miscellaneous items.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much of the $50,000 is included in miscellaneous items, and how much goes for the maintenance and care of the automobile for the Vice-President?

Mr. GILLETT. I think about $2,000 is for the care and maintenance of the automobile.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How does it cost that much?

Mr. GILLETT. I think the driver is paid $1,300.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And $700 for expenses of repairs and maintenance?

Mr. GILLETT. Maintenance and repairs.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As to the remainder of the appropriation the gentleman can not tell what is included?

Mr. GILLETT. Miscellaneous items of the Senate. We do not supervise the Senate's miscellaneous expenses. The House has a large appropriation for miscellaneous expenses, special committees, extra stenographers' pay, and incidental expenses; all that is involved.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And all of the item of this $50,000 that the gentleman can give is $2,200. Is that correct?

Mr. GILLETT. The Secretary of the Senate makes a report giving a detailed statement of this account, and the committee does not criticise or scrutinize the Senate items.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage of Representatives and Delegates, and expenses of resident commissioners, $154,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 25, page 14, add the following:
"Provided, That the mileage shall be limited to actual traveling expenses going to a session of Congress and returning home."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that that changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois, if he desires to be heard, upon the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can offer anything that will overcome the point of order upon this proviso which is offered in the way of an amendment, but I do hope that the Members of the House who desire to be economical, especially at this time, will not make the point of order. From my understanding, this law was brought about through the old way of traveling by stage coach, when it was supposed that the expenses of going to the capital and returning home amounted to about 40 cents a mile, and the law was based on the expense of traveling that way.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And if the gentleman will pardon me, that included also the expenses of the Member's family and the carriages and horses.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will recall that the amount was fixed long after stage coaches had gone out of existence.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], makes the point of order.

Mr. MANN. He reserved it, as I understand it.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; he made the point of order, and the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up the time of this committee with any extended remarks, but I would suggest to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that I have not consumed very much of the time of this committee and do not intend to now, realizing that this is clearly subject to a point of order, but I simply submit this amendment as a matter of fairness and economy in this House that I think we ought to adopt.

Mr. GRAFF. May I ask the gentleman a question, or rather make a statement?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAFF. About three years ago the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment on one of the appropriation bills, reducing the amount from 20 cents each way to 8 cents each way, but a point of order was made upon it by a gentleman who had not the fear of the Lord in his heart, and it went out. We have no authority to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds: Chief engineer, $1,900; 3 assistant engineers, at $1,300 each; 24 conductors of elevators, including 14 for service in the House Office Building, at $1,200 each, who shall be under the supervision and direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds; machinist, $1,300; electrician, $1,200; 2 laborers, at $820 each; 5 firemen, at $900 each; laborer, $1,000; 3 laborers, at $800 each; in all, $46,640.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph until I get some information. Has there been any change in this paragraph from last year?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to be positive about it.

Mr. GILLETT. I am positive there has not been.

Mr. MANN. There has not been.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. I see here that there are 24 conductors of elevators provided for, including 14 for service in the House Office Building. Are there 14 conductors of elevators in the House Office Building?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. How many elevators are in use over there?

Mr. GILLETT. That is more than I can tell the gentleman. There are seven there, and whether they are all in use I do not know.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman means there are seven double elevators—that is, at each corner of the building there are two elevators, I believe?

Mr. MANN. There are seven passenger elevators over there and an additional freight elevator or two.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Six, I think.

Mr. MANN. There are four passenger elevators at this corner and one at each of the other corners.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, there are two passenger elevators in each corner and only one of them running.

Mr. MANN. That may be. They do not all run.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is the reason I make this inquiry. I have had it happen several times that I have been to the elevators and they did not seem to be running at all at the particular corner of the building I went to. Generally the two elevators here at the entrance near the House end of the Capitol are found running, and the one there at the Library is also running, also the one on New Jersey avenue, in front of the hotel—Congress Hall, I think it is.

I frequently do not find the others running, however. Then there is another thing about it, Mr. Chairman, that I desire to speak about. I have known this House to be in session frequently after 5 o'clock, and Members having to go over to the House Office Building after adjournment, and in some instances before the adjournment at 5 o'clock, have been unable to find any conductor running some of these elevators. I mention this in order to call attention to it. If we are paying for 14 conductors of elevators over there, there ought to be 14 men there for the convenience and accommodation of the Members of this House.

I think that these elevator people ought to stay here and work as long as the Members of this House work. The conductors of elevators here serve the House of Representatives, and right out here near the Speaker's office these conductors stay here as long as we are in session, and I do not see why they should be required to perform a greater service than those in the House Office Building; or to state the proposition conversely, which would be the proper way to state it, I do not see why the conductors of elevators in the House Office Building should not be required to render just as constant and just as long a service as those who are right here in the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman I can only answer for the elevators in this corner of the House Office Building, where my room is situated, and I can say that they remain there until Congress adjourns and the Members come over and get their hats and coats and go away. I am near that elevator in this corner of the House Office Building, and I know they stay there on Sundays also. I do not know what the balance do.

Mr. CLAYTON. I stated that in the beginning.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, there is one elevator never in service after 5 o'clock at this end of the House Office Building. The elevator that is on the street on which the street cars run—B street—is always closed down at 5 o'clock, an elevator which leads nearest to my office, and I invariably have to walk up the steps after that time.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman agrees with me that such ought not to be the case.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. CLAYTON. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is the time right here to make this complaint against this inefficient service, and I am glad to have the testimony of the gentleman from Kentucky, as well as the other gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think the complaint of gentlemen in regard to the elevator service in the House Office Building is well founded. My attention has been called to it several times and I have conferred with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds about it and he has assured me that he has given directions that those elevators should not be discontinued until after the House adjourns. During the last session such orders were carried out. During this session one elevator has been stopping at 5 o'clock, and I have called the attention of the superintendent to the situation and I am assured that the situation will be remedied a once.

Mr. CLAYTON. I desire to interrupt the gentleman to say that I agree to what my friend from Kentucky says. The particular elevator that is nearest to the Capitol building, or the nearest to his office and nearest to mine at that end of the building, has frequently not been running this session after 5 o'clock, although we have stayed here often after 5 o'clock ourselves; and upon the suggestion of the gentleman from New York I do hope that the service will be improved and that there will be no cause for further complaint.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. I have not the floor. The gentleman from New York has it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact the elevator in the House Office Building is operated from 8 o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock at night?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the elevator which is operated adjacent to the room occupied by the gentleman from Minnesota; but the complaint is made that the elevator operated on the other side of the rotunda, which would not be quite so convenient to the gentleman from Minnesota, is discontinued at the time when it is most required.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman might utilize the elevator that is nearest to my room, and then walk around to his office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be true, but both of those elevators, for the convenience of the Members of the House, should be operated for at least some reasonable time after the House adjourns.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York will cooperate with me and the little influence we have in regard to the House Office Building I think we will succeed in correcting the condition which causes this complaint. The elevator men operating these elevators, who receive pay for the year, should be obliged to run the elevators as long as the House is in session and until a reasonable time thereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to call attention to another case. The elevator in the southeast corner that goes up to the Agricultural Committee room stops at 4 o'clock. I know this, because I have had to walk several times.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In reply to the gentleman's question, I wish to say that the elevator to which the gentleman refers is at a corner of the building at which Members seldom, if ever, come in or go out; so that, even if that elevator were used, the Members would walk to one of the other entrances in order to enter or leave the building. There is not the same necessity for that service being continued after 4 or 5 o'clock as there is in the other elevators in the building.

Mr. SIMS. If you pay the man the same amount, why not let him serve, unless he goes off to do something else?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That might be true. But he works eight hours each day.

The two elevators on either side of the Rotunda should be operated until the gentlemen leave the building after the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is one of three members of the committee that absolutely controls that whole business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is why I made the statement that I have, that as a member of the commission complaints have been made to me. I have been inconvenienced myself, which perhaps is one of the things that is likely to prompt us most keenly to perform our duties. I have taken the matter up, and orders have been issued which will remove the objections made.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, just one word more. I desire to know, and it has not been made clear yet, how many conductors of elevators are actually engaged in conducting elevators in the House Office Building. We are paying for 14. I understand there are 7 elevators, and it is not pretended that even the 7 comply with the full duties required of them. I wish to know of members of the committee how many of these 14 conductors of elevators actually run the elevators of the House Office Building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I can say in reply to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] that the 14 conductors operate these elevators. Some of the elevators are not operated at all. When the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds submitted his estimate for 14 elevator operators over a year ago I requested him to submit a schedule showing how the elevators were to be operated, so that each one of these operators would be employed at least eight hours a day. Some of the elevators are operated from 8 o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock at night, so that with the shifts that are required the 14 men are necessary in order to give the service.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am very glad the gentleman has made that explanation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the elevator about which the complaint has been made at times it is necessary perhaps that that operator should work more than the eight hours a day. I have never felt that that would be any injustice or unfairness, because by the shifting of the men from time to time the work would be equalized, and then when the House is not in session they are not all occupied continuously.

Mr. CLAYTON. I agree with that view.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Superintendent of the Capitol agreed with me that the two elevators at the Rotunda unquestionably should be operated at least fifteen minutes after the adjournment of the House. After the Members have gone from the House to the building, the necessity for the two elevators during the rest of the evening is not so great, if at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks, messengers, and janitors to committees: Clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, $3,000; assistant clerk and stenographer, $2,000; assistant clerk, $1,900; two janitors, one at $1,000 and one at $720; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $4,000, and $1,000 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; assistant clerk and stenographer, $2,000; assistant clerk, $1,900; janitor, $1,000; clerks to Committees on Accounts, Agriculture, Claims, District of Columbia, Foreign Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Indian Affairs, Invalid Pensions, Judiciary, Military Affairs, Pensions, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Public Buildings and Grounds, War Claims, and clerk to continue Digest of Claims under resolution of March 7, 1888, 15 in all, at $2,500 each; clerk to Committee on Naval Affairs, $2,400; stenographer to Committee on Invalid Pensions, $2,190; clerks to the Committees on Banking and Currency, Census; Coinage Weights, and Measures; Elections Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Enrolled Bills, Immigration and Naturalization, Industrial Arts and Expositions, Insular Affairs, Irrigation of Arid Lands, Labor, Library, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Patents, Printing, Public Lands, Rivers and Harbors, Revision of the Laws, Territories, additional clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, 22 in all, at $2,000 each; assistant clerks to the Committees on Accounts, Agriculture, District of Columbia, Indian Affairs, and Rivers and Harbors, five in all, at $1,800 each; assistant clerks to the Committees on the Judiciary and Pensions, two in all, at $1,600 each; assistant clerk to Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, $1,500; assistant clerks to the Committees on Foreign Affairs and Post-Offices and Post-Roads, two in all, at $1,400 each; assistant clerks to the Committees on Banking and Currency, Claims, Public Buildings and Grounds, Public Lands, and War Claims, five in all, at $1,200 each; in all $127,110.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, line 5, after the word "grounds," insert "rivers and harbors;" and in line 17 strike out the words "rivers and harbors."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this morning this House adopted the report of the Committee on Accounts allowing the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a clerk, and consequently I offer this amendment to conform to the adoption of the report by the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will it not be necessary to make the appropriation anyway?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like, in this connection, to ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct all totals to agree with amendments which may be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask what progress is being made in the preparation of the digest of claims provided for in lines 6 and 7, on page 19, if the gentleman can state it.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, we were simply informed that the work was continuing. It was adopted by an order of this House, and is a continuing work; and we simply were being told it was being prosecuted. We did not investigate particularly.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, it was adopted in 1888. It was not contemplated that it would be permanent work at the time of its adoption.

Mr. GILLETT. Well, the clerk of the Committee on War Claims is doing it. He is the permanent clerk of that committee.

Mr. GARRETT. Is he drawing a double salary?

Mr. GILLETT. This is an assistant to him. But he is acting as clerk of the committee, too. I remember we inquired about that some years ago. We did not do so this year, but we did inquire about it one year, and were told that it is being prosecuted. Personally I had my doubt as to the usefulness of it; and the House has ordered it.

Mr. GARRETT. The matter has been on the floor before and discussed some.

Mr. GILLETT. I think so.

Mr. GARRETT. I think there was some intimation back in the past that this matter would be gotten through with.

Mr. MANN. I have had the matter up on the floor once or twice. The work has been done. The trouble is that it is of no value when done, because the House has made no provision for having it utilized. The work is done on the card-index system, and the work is not done as docket or in books, or used to be, and I suppose it is still, so that you do not have an opportunity to get at it. I presume if the work is brought down fully to date that there will be some method provided to find out in reference to a claim, but whether they will ever get far enough up to date to find the facts in reference to a claim, of recent origin, I am not sure, because we are a little slow.

Mr. GARRETT. These are Tucker Act cases, are they not?

Mr. MANN. Everything.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman say that this is provided for in 1882?

Mr. GARRETT. It was provided for in a resolution of 1888.

Mr. NORRIS. It has been carried in the appropriation bills ever since?

Mr. GARRETT. It has been carried ever since I have been here; I do not know how long before.

Mr. MANN. Where is that in the bill?

Mr. GARRETT. On page 19, lines 5 and 6.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume if the gentleman would investigate he would find out really the object of providing for it originally was not to have the claims indexed, because it is quite apparent that would be done long ago, as the gentleman from Illinois says.

Mr. MANN. The item the gentleman from Tennessee has referred to is not the item I was referring to. I supposed he referred to the item on page 17:

Three clerks to continue preparation of digest of private claims, at $1,600 each.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume an investigation would show the real object was to find a job for a man, and that it is hardly right to interfere with it.

Mr. GILLETT. The clerk to which the gentleman from Illinois referred a while ago, being under a misapprehension, as I understand, that work has been done by the clerk of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. NORRIS. This particular item to which you refer is in progress yet?

Mr. MANN. It has not been completed.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska is not quite apt. In this case he is quite mistaken.

Mr. NORRIS. I may be.

Mr. GILLETT. The clerk who is doing this work is a special expert in it. When the House changed its political complexion, some years ago, he was dropped and another put in; and it was realized after a time that his services were invaluable, and by a special order of the House that person was put back.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman, Can you give the House any idea how much work of this kind was to be performed, and how it has progressed?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I can not.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems that it has taken a long time.

Mr. GILLETT. If the chairman of the Committee on Claims were here, he could doubtless tell.

Mr. GRAFF. I can say to the gentleman from Nebraska, that when I served as chairman of the Committee on Claims and desired to obtain information on these subjects, I frequently went to this expert, who was acting as assistant clerk to the War Claims Committee, and he disclosed a wonderful amount of information about all the claims pending against the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt he has a great deal of information. But if his work is of any particular value, why is it necessary to go to the man himself? Why not take his index and find out?

Mr. GRAFF. I was not saying that the index itself was utilized by us. It was not printed.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska, it is quite evident that in the consideration of war claims, where we have already had reported at this session of Congress, I think, several hundred resolutions referring bills to the Court of Claims, one clerk in the Committee on War Claims can not keep these claims digested; and, as I understand, this item refers to an additional clerk to the Committee on War Claims, who does keep digested and down to date, indexed and briefed, all of these claims, whether in the form of bills introduced or in the form of reports from the Court of Claims. Of course, that requires an expert to do it, so that it is at all satisfactory.

Mr. NORRIS. Upon the completion of the work, is it in such condition that any ordinary individual will be able to get information from the index? Is not that the object of the work?

Mr. MANN. The work is continuous.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt that is true, but what I mean now is this: If his work is up to date, and any Member wanted to look up some old claim——

Mr. MANN. Any Member can get information concerning these old claims, so far as he has it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I suppose the gentleman referred to is Mr. Holloway, who serves the War Claims Committee.

Mr. MANN. There are two positions; one is the clerk and one is the assistant.

Mr. CLAYTON. I may say that there has been a digest made, but naturally the cases multiply, and I suppose before a great while there will be another volume or another edition of this digest printed. I may say in this connection that it is absolutely indispensable to the successful work of the War Claims Committee that we have this clerk continuously. For instance, you may take these claims that come before the War Claims Committee; a great many of them have undergone some sort of an investigation by the War Department, or some other department of the Government; sometimes an investigation by the Court of Claims, sometimes an investigation by this House, sometimes an investigation by the other branch of our legislature; and various reports and documents and information have been gathered together, and it is necessary for the committee to have them in order to act intelligently. Now, it would be impossible for the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee, with this multitudinous lot of claims, to get the detailed information in reference to any one of them.

We have this gentleman there, who serves us most efficiently and lightens our labors a great deal and enables us to reach correct and intelligent conclusion. He or some other man to fill his place is indispensable, and he is more than any mere written or printed digest. He not only knows what has been put into printed form, but he has a remarkable gift of memory. If you go there and mention any old war claim to him he can tell you all about it, and in a few minutes give you every line that has ever been written or printed on the subject.

Mr. GARRETT. If I may be indulged for just a moment or two, I wish to say that I am sure that the services of the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Alabama refers have been very efficient and very helpful. I have had frequent occasion to go before the clerk of that committee seeking information, and I have always received from Mr. Holloway exceedingly courteous treatment and have found him exceedingly well informed. It is important to the Members, and particularly those of us who come from that section where there are so many of the old war claims, to get these claims in some shape where we can get information about them, if possible.

The most tedious correspondence that I have is in regard to these war claims. It takes a three or four page letter to explain to the average person who writes you in regard to them the course of procedure that must be followed in order to get action on a claim, and I have found it exceedingly difficult to trace these claims in such a way that I could determine whether the particular case presented was a Bowman Act case, a Tucker Act case, or whether it was a case which, under the rule in vogue until a short time ago in the Committee on War Claims, could come before Congress at all. A digest in these cases that would give something of the history of what department they were presented to—the Court of Claims, the Southern Claims Commission, or whether they were presented to Congress—would be very valuable and very convenient to the Members of the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. I may say to the gentleman that that work has been done in part, and he will find it in the committee room at this good time—a digest that is of great help in these cases, in printed form.

Mr. GARRETT. In book form. I know it is true; that there has been for years a book of that character; but it does not include all the claims. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For janitors for rooms of the Committees on Accounts, Agriculture, Elections No. 1, Invalid Pensions, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post-Office and Post-Roads, Printing, and Rivers and Harbors, 8 in all, at $1,000 each; for janitors for rooms of the Committees on Banking and Currency, Census, Claims, District of Columbia, Elections Nos. 2 and 3, Enrolled Bills, Expenditures in the Navy Department, Foreign Affairs, Immigration and Naturalization, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Indian Affairs, Industrial Arts and Expositions, Insular Affairs, Irrigation of Arid Lands, Judiciary, Labor, Library, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Patents, Pensions, Public Buildings and Grounds, Public Lands, Revision of the Laws, Territories, and War Claims, 27 in all, at $720 each; and said janitors shall be appointed by the chairmen, respectively, of said committees, and shall perform under the direction of the Doorkeeper all of the duties heretofore required of messengers detailed to said committees by the Doorkeeper, and shall be subject to removal by the Doorkeeper at any time after the termination of the Congress during which they were appointed; in all, $27,720.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, on page 20, in line 11, after the words "Invalid Pensions," the words "Interstate and Foreign Commerce."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, line 11, after the words "Invalid Pensions," insert the words "Interstate and Foreign Commerce."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. And also to strike out the same words in line 18.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Interstate and Foreign Commerce" in line 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman that it seems to me, on the adoption of his amendment, there ought to be another one in line 13, where the words "eight in all," should be changed to the words "nine in all."

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman from Alabama that "eight" is already wrong, it should be "nine;" but I am informed that unanimous consent has been given to correct the totals, and that this is a total. It should be "ten." Mr. Chairman, let that be corrected now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 13, page 20, strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. I notice that there is a different compensation paid to janitors, some at $1,000, some at $720. I would like to have the gentleman from Massachusetts explain why and upon what basis this difference exists in the amount of salaries.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, we have simply followed the precedent that has been set by numerous preceding Congresses, but in general a distinction has been made. I will not say that it is invariable that in those committees that have two rooms where there is a janitor there all day long he is allowed a higher salary.

Mr. NORRIS. The Committee on Claims has two rooms, and I think is in session doing a good deal of work——

Mr. GILLETT. I will say that the Committee on Appropriations does not undertake to revise the list each year; we follow the preceding appropriation bill, unless some specific case is brought before us, and then if it seems that it should be granted, we do so. Otherwise we follow the preceding practice of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. If my colleague will allow me, I want to make a suggestion. In making up this bill we make it up in accordance with the bill for the current fiscal year, unless the House by resolution has increased some one's salary, or has created some new position.

Mr. NORRIS. Are all these salaries of these different janitors for these different committees fixed by law?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, by law; and also by authorization of the House, many of them. Some of them are fixed by law. The House had been adding to the number of its employees in clerks as well as janitors by resolution from the Committee on Accounts, and when the House creates a new position or creates a new salary, or increases the salary, this committee follows the recommendations of the House.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that the Judiciary Committee ought to be transferred also.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 8 clerks to committees, at $6 each per day during the session, $5,616.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the necessity for these 8 clerks?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are clerks who have no permanent committees.

Mr. GILLETT. Those clerks have been adopted by resolution of the House. The law authorizes it, and we simply follow the instruction of the House in granting it.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that this is a measure of economy, pure and simple. This provides for a certain number of session clerks. These session clerks are distributed through a resolution, introduced by the Committee on Accounts, adopted by the House. If we did not provide for these session clerks, we would be called upon to, and undoubtedly would, provide for the same committees annual clerks.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand that these clerks are clerks used in emergencies?

Mr. MANN. They are clerks given to committees who do not have any other clerks.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to know what committees they are.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find the resolution already adopted by the House in reference to them for the session clerks, and it is quite certain that if we did not provide session clerks to these committees, we would be called upon to provide annual clerks, and doubtless we would do it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I am glad the gentleman is able to give me this information.

Mr. MANN. I am not interested in the clerks, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; nor am I. Are these clerks that are ordinarily apportioned to some minor committees that never meet?

Mr. MANN. I believe there are no minor committees which never meet any longer. Sometimes I wish there were.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I see there is a Committee on Acoustics and Ventilation. Is that committee provided with one of these clerks?

Mr. MANN. No; the Committee on Acoustics and Ventilation does not have one of these. I am not sure that the gentleman in charge of that committee, who is a very able man, might not profitably use a clerk in the work that he is now undertaking, in endeavoring to provide better air for the House Chamber.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman thinks that this provision is in the interests of economy?

Mr. MANN. I think it is undoubtedly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Official reporters: Six official reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House, at $5,000 each; assistant, $1,800; in all, $31,800.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, page 26, after the word "assistant," strike out the words "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" and in line 24, page 26, after the word "all," strike out the words "thirty-one thousand eight hundred" and insert the words "thirty-two thousand five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member and Delegate for clerk hire, necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $594,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. Upon the check which Members of this House sign for their clerk hire, and which indorsement reads as follows:

If indorsement is made by mark (X), it must be witnessed by two persons who can write, giving their place of residence in full.

At that time I asked the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he knew of any other Members of this House outside of the Massachusetts delegation who were unable to write [laughter], and if I remember correctly, he replied that he did not. I now desire to ask the gentleman whether that exigency still exists which makes it necessary to have this form of indorsement on the check?

Mr. GILLETT. That form of indorsement is apparently provided by law.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me to answer the question, I will state that I understand there is a general statute which requires that sort of notice to be put on all vouchers, and it goes on all these vouchers as on all others and is not meant to catch particular persons who can not write their names.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was not meant to apply only to Members of Congress, then?

Mr. KEIFER. No; it is on all vouchers of every kind in all the departments.

Mr. MANN. It may be, as the gentleman says, that vouchers made under oath——

Mr. OLCOTT. I would suggest that a special indorsement be made for Members of Congress who may not write legibly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter any Representative or Delegate in Congress or Resident Commissioner may file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives a designation of his clerk, and thereafter the warrant for his compensation, at the rate of $125 per month, shall be made in the name of the person so designated until otherwise directed by said Representative, Delegate, or Commissioner, and such payment shall be in lieu of any other or further allowance to said Representative, Delegate, or Commissioner for clerk hire.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is purely legislative, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Index to the Statutes at Large: For continuing the preparation of an index to the Statutes at Large of the United States, $5,000, to be expended by the Librarian of Congress for the salaries of the persons whom he employs to prepare the index and for incidental expenses; the scope, classification, and style of the index to be such as the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses of Congress shall direct or approve.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There was a great deal of discussion in reference to this item when it first went in. I do not know whether the gentleman in charge of the bill has had occasion to have his attention particularly called to this matter; but if so, will he give us the situation as it now stands?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the index was first prepared of the statutes from 1873 down to date. That was completed some time ago, and then they began the work on the index of the statutes before 1873, and have proceeded so far that they will finish it by the 1st of January. As the gentleman will note, consequently we have reduced the appropriation from $10,000 to $5,000, with the understanding it shall be finished for that amount.

Mr. MANN. They will be able to finish it for this amount?

Mr. GILLETT. They expect to finish it at that time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15381) making appropriations for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, had further insisted upon its amendment, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. BULKELEY, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the same.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Director of the consular service, $4,500; counselor for the Department of State, and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500 and each to be appointed by the Secretary of State, the one from the legal profession and the other from the grade of minister or above in the diplomatic service; eight officers to aid in important drafting work, four at salaries of $4,500 each and four at salaries of $3,000 each, and hereafter to be appointed by the Secretary of State from the diplomatic and consular services or other branch of the government service, and to be employed upon tariff, treaty, and trade relations and negotiations or as chief of division of far eastern, Latin-American, near eastern, or European affairs, or upon other work in connection with foreign relations: Provided, That in cases of selection from the foreign service the salary paid shall in no case exceed that of the post from which the diplomatic or consular officer detailed to the department has been taken; assistant solicitor, $3,000; law clerk, $2,500; 1 clerk of class 4; 3 clerks of class 3; 2 clerks of class 1 (one of whom shall be a telegraph operator); 3 clerks at $1,000 each; 3 assistant messengers; for the rent of rooms outside of the Department of State to accommodate the Bureau of Trade Relations and the Bureau of Accounts or other offices, not to exceed $5,500; for meeting occasional and unforeseen expenses arising in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State under tariff legislation and otherwise and in the negotiation and preparation of treaties, arrangements, and agreements for the advancement of commercial and other interests, including the appointment of necessary employees at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected and their compensation fixed by the Secretary of State, and to be expended under his direction, $25,340; in all, $100,000. A detailed statement showing expenditures, including salaries or rates of compensation paid under the last item of this appropriation, shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to the director of the consular service, counselor for the Department of State, and resident diplomatic officer, especially the resident diplomatic officer. What is that contemplated to be, and what is it now?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this was a reorganization of the Department of State, which the gentleman remembers was first carried in one of the appropriation bills of last year, on which there was a very vigorous contest in the House. We have taken the exact reorganization which has been made under the lump sum which we granted to the State Department in that bill, and instead of giving the lump sum have specified the places and the salaries which the Secretary of State had arranged. Now, the resident diplomatic officer is an officer who is brought from some one of our posts abroad and is temporarily stationed here, the purpose being, as I understand it, to have some one in the department and to keep changing from the diplomatic service to the department here, so that the department here shall be more in touch with the service abroad. That was the theory, believing the State Department in that way will be better posted as to what the active diplomatic officers are doing.

Mr. MANN. As I recall the lump-sum appropriation, it was an appropriation made to carry out the provisions of the tariff law, and not for the purpose of providing these officers, which have no relation with the tariff law. The fight in reference to that in the House was whether we should appropriate a certain sum of money for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the law authorizing the President to obtain information, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit me——

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from Minnesota had charge of that bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. A hundred thousand dollars was carried in the general deficiency bill for the State Department, and the provision appropriating the money was a provision requiring the State Department to submit at this session of Congress a detailed statement of the employees employed under that appropriation here in the State Department or in the field, in carrying out and administering that provision of law for which this appropriation was made. Now, under that lump-sum appropriation of $100,000 was organized what was known as the "eastern division," and also the men who are employed in connection with the investigation relative to foreign tariffs. The specific appropriation in this bill is in accordance with the recommendation made to Congress by the Secretary of State as to the number of people who are required here and elsewhere and the positions that these men were occupying. The remainder of the appropriation is appropriated for the service outside of the District of Columbia. The lump sum now amounts, as I recall it, to $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota inform the House whether the lump-sum appropriation in the urgent deficiency bill of last August was not provided for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Payne tariff law?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; only in so far as investigations by the State Department were necessary to ascertain what countries were discriminating against the products of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Did not the gentleman so state on the floor of the House at the time?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman, I think, is confusing two items that occurred in the deficiency bill. The other item was $75,000, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States in respect to the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law.

Mr. MANN. There were two items.

Mr. TAWNEY. The item in the general deficiency bill appropriating $100,000 was as follows:

For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State, under tariff legislation and otherwise, and in the negotiation and preparation of treaties, arrangements, and agreements for the advancement of commercial and other interests of the United States, and for the maintenance of a division of far-eastern affairs in the Department of State, including the payment of necessary employees, at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected, and their compensation fixed, by the Secretary of State and to be expended under his direction, fiscal year 1910, $100,000. A detailed statement showing expenditures, including salaries or rates of compensation paid under this appropriation shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session; and estimates for further appropriations hereunder shall include in detail salaries for all persons to be employed and paid in the Department of State at Washington, D. C.

Mr. MANN. I remember the item very well. I remember the discussion that took place on the floor of the House. The item was sharply attacked on the ground that there was already a provision of $100,000 for the President, and here was another provision for the Secretary of State—the one for the purpose of appointing a tariff board to gain information and the other for the purpose of acquiring the information necessary to gain through the Department of State in dealing with foreign countries, the whole subject, outside of acquiring information for future use in regard to tariffs, to adjust the maximum and minimum tariff relations of the United States with foreign countries. Now, having secured that appropriation, which would not have been warranted by any law then in existence, here is a large bureau created without any legislative action of Congress, and I dare say without any intention on the part of Congress, unless the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota was in the secret confidence of the State Department on the subject; and if he was, he did not disclose that confidence to the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that the gentleman from Illinois is in error in saying that a large bureau has been created. No bureau whatever has been created. A division has been created, and that division was authorized, or the head of the department was authorized, to create that division, by the language carrying the appropriation in the bill approved August 5, 1909. So there is no bureau, but a division has been created, and that was authorized at that time.

Mr. MANN. A rose by any other name would smell as sweet. I do not care whether it is a division, a bureau, or a department.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have a chief of division. They have the organization of a division, but not the organization of a bureau.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Has the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] got the language of the act of last year there?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have just read it. I have a copy of the act here.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think it provided in so many words for the creation of said division.

Mr. MANN. We have provided for the creation of a division of far eastern affairs, I believe, or something of that sort.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will read this language to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS]:

And for the maintenance of a division of far eastern affairs in the Department of State, including payment of necessary employees at the seat of Government.

Mr. MANN. May I ask what necessity there is for eight officers engaged in important drafting work, four at salaries of $4,500 each, and four at salaries of $3,000 each?

Mr. TAWNEY. What part of the paragraph does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. MANN. To line 22, page 44. I take it that these tariff matters will soon be out of the way. We have agreed upon the minimum tariff with every country almost, except France and Canada——

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will read the statement of the Secretary of State on the subject he will ascertain. The committee interrogated the Secretary as to the necessity for continuing some of these employees, on the theory that when the minimum and maximum tariff laws were adjusted with foreign countries there would no longer be any necessity for continuing these men in the employment of the Government, but after the Secretary's statement we were satisfied these employees would have to be continued indefinitely.

The Secretary of State pointed out to the committee very clearly that changes are being made in foreign tariffs all the time, and that it will require this service continually for the purpose of keeping in touch with such changes and to ascertain whether or not the products of the United States are being discriminated against by reason of such changes in foreign tariffs.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. The information that this corps of experts manages to get hold of is not to be made public at all, is it?

Mr. TAWNEY. This information is made public to the extent that any information obtained by the State Department is made public. It is collected by the employees in the State Department. The information collected under the provision for the $75,000 appropriated and expended under the direction of the President will be made public, in the discretion of the President.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, now, I would like to ask the gentleman this question: What earthly good will that information be unless we have it? The President can not pass a tariff bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the paragraph that is under consideration is a paragraph providing for the salaries of people who are employed under the State Department, not for the salaries of people employed under the $75,000 appropriation. That appropriation will be carried in another appropriation bill. This information is used by the State Department in connection with commercial arrangements with foreign countries, for the purpose of removing restrictions on or receiving more favorable terms for the admission of our products into foreign markets.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This item beginning on page 44, line 16, which is to provide for the appointment of these new officers in the office of the Secretary of State, is that what we knocked out last February after considerable of a scuffle?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no. There is nothing in these positions that has any relation with the office that was struck out in the last legislative, executive, and judicial bill. These positions are new positions.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. New positions?

Mr. TAWNEY. These positions have been created.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When?

Mr. TAWNEY. Since August 5 last. Since the passage of the general deficiency bill at the extra session of this Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who created them?

Mr. TAWNEY. The law created them, and we made the appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of enabling the State Department to execute the additional work imposed upon it under the tariff act, as the paragraph in the general deficiency act provided, as clearly shown by the paragraph of that act which I have read to the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, what kind of a function does this counselor to the State Department perform?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the gentleman is aware of the fact that in the organization of this new division, which Congress authorized in the act approved August 5, 1909, it necessarily involves more or less of a reorganization of some other divisions. This officer is employed as a diplomatic counselor, an adviser to the Secretary of State, and it is intended to be a permanent office.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought the Secretary of State was qualified by extraordinary legislation, which never did qualify him, and because of his own extraordinary legal attainments. If that is so, what is the need of having another lawyer?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not agree with the gentleman as to that. I think it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the country that the gentleman appointed Secretary of Sate was eminently qualified to perform the duties of that office and has been discharging the duties of that office with great efficiency and to the satisfaction of the people.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If he is qualified, why does he need this counselor, this adviser?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, just the same as the head of any other great department is in need of counsel or of a legal officer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do you have the next one?

Mr. TAWNEY. The same with the Attorney-General of the United States. The gentleman might with greater propriety ask why the Attorney-General should have a Solicitor-General.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask somebody to tell.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will be very glad to give the gentleman that information at the proper time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, what do you say about the next one—resident diplomatic officer? What does he do?

Mr. TAWNEY. The resident diplomatic officer, as the Secretary of State explained to the committee—and the gentleman will find it if he will read the hearings—is in charge of the consular service in the far eastern division in particular. He has general supervision of the consular service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, it is simply a way of circumventing my proposition about an undersecretary of state, is it not? Now, really, is not this man I am talking about now appointed to take the place of undersecretary of state, knocked out on the 1st day of March last year?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all. This officer was not appointed until the new division was created, which I have tried to explain to the gentleman from Missouri, and the reorganization involved more or less the other divisions of the State Department.

Mr. MANN. The resident diplomatic officer here is a man who has been in the diplomatic service for a great many years, and, as I am informed, used to be in South America and was transferred here, so that, as far as that is concerned, he is not in any way taking the place of the office to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and I were both objecting last spring.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where did they find this title, "resident diplomatic officer?"

Mr. MANN. I do not undertake to say. I am not arising in defense of the proposition, the gentleman understands.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking for information. First, I want to find out what the proper explanation is of calling the man in charge of our Latin-American affairs the resident diplomatic official of this Government.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what he may be in charge of.

Mr. GILLETT. The purpose of that, I think, was to bring a more intimate connection between the State Department here and our diplomatic branch abroad.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the International Bureau of American Republics doing?

Mr. GILLETT. That is doing the same with our South American trade. It is not a part of the State Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think this is one of those unnecessary duplications, to eliminate which I hope there may be provided a business-methods commission before this Congress adjourns.

Mr. GILLETT. They are both of them extremely valuable, I believe.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What does this man do?

Mr. MANN. I have just been told that the office of resident diplomatic officer is now filled by Mr. Dawson, who used to be in Chile. I was told some time ago by some one that the awarding of the contract for the Brazilian or Argentine battle ship had been largely brought about through the work of Mr. Dawson. Whether that is a justification for the office, I do not pretend to say.

Mr. PAYNE. If I may ascertain who has the floor, I should like to make a suggestion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have the floor.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to this fact: The resident diplomatic officer, Mr. Dawson, was appointed minister to Chile, and at that post received a salary of $12,000 a year. He now receives, in his present position in Washington, $7,500 a year. He is at the head of the Latin-American Bureau, having charge of all questions in relation to Latin America. He has served in the diplomatic service in Latin America for a number of years and is very familiar with that service.

Mr. MANN. And married a Latin-American wife.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand he is married to a Latin-American wife. He was brought here to take charge of all questions arising in our diplomatic relations with the Latin-American countries, and left a salary of $12,000 to accept this position here at $7,500.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is anybody drawing that $12,000 now?

Mr. MANN. We have a minister to Chile, of course.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, why do you state that in mitigation of his offense?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do it to show the capacity of the man and his value to the diplomatic service of the Latin-American republics.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask if it is true, as suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that this man, the resident diplomatic officer, is discharging precisely the same duties as those performed by Hon. John Barrett, Director of the Bureau of American Republics?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Missouri surely must know that there is no relationship whatever between the two positions. Mr. Barrett does not perform any diplomatic service whatever.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What does he do?

Mr. TAWNEY. He is at the head of the Bureau of American Republics, an organization which each American Republic is a member of, and which is sustained by them all. That organization has no relation whatever to our State Department in so far as the State Department is charged with the duty of performing the dipolmatic service of this country. It is entirely separate and distinct from it. All questions arising between any individual Latin-American Republic and the United States are adjusted by the State Department and the diplomatic representative of that Republic here at Washington. Now, the Bureau of American Republics looks after the development and the encouragement and growth of the commercial interests primarily of the republics of South and Central America and our own trade relations with those several republics.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Individually, I think John Barrett does more good for the people of the United States than anybody connected with the State Department, or the whole State Department put together. He and his bureau is trying to do what we ought to have been trying to do for the last fifty years, and that is to cultivate the freest and closest commercial relations possible with all Latin-Americans. He issued a bulletin last summer that gives a vast amount of information, if people will take the time to read it, and it is well worth reading. What I can not understand is what this diplomatic officer is good for, or what he does.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri appreciates, I am sure, for what he said suggests it, that it is extremely important for us to cultivate the closest trade relations with the countries south of us. There is no question but that in the last few years trade of the United States with foreign nations has immensely increased, and our State Department and all of us are recognizing more than ever how important it is for us to cultivate trade relations not only with South America, but the Far East, and one of these departments especially relates to that. It is impossible for the Secretary of State to supervise all this, and it is also impossible for the small force that the State Department has had in recent years to properly cultivate and administer our new relations.

It seems to me that it is extremely wise that the House, as was determined last year, should enlarge the personnel of the State Department and be able to have somebody who is in touch with the different parts of the world, and is vigorously active in giving our people information and in sustaining their rights in foreign trade relations. That is what the Secretary of State assured us this organization would do, and it seems to me that it is extremely valuable, and that it would be a great mistake if we did not allow them now, as we did before, to carry it on.

I can not say precisely; I do not suppose anybody here could state what each officer is to do. I do not know what all the work is that comes into the State Department, but we were assured that it is prodigious, and that what the gentleman from Illinois has alluded to in securing the building of these two battle ships was done through the State Department. They are working along those lines, improving and increasing the American trade. I know the gentleman from Missouri is as anxious as anybody to do that, and I believe that this is a wise way to do it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course I am as anxious as anybody, and I could draw a statute in half an hour that would give us all the trade of South and Central America, but you would vote it down. [Laughter.] Now, I want to ask a question, if the gentleman from Massachusetts has any information as to a current rumor that is floating about that the way the shipyards got the building of these two South American battle ships was that the steel trust agreed with the shipbuilding companies that they would furnish the steel at export prices instead of the domestic prices?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not even heard the rumor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman read the newspapers?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not read that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It has been in the newspapers.

Mr. GILLETT. I have not seen it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has not the gentleman any information about it?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not, because I have not heard of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Massachusetts knows that the President in his message recommended economy?

Mr. GILLETT. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that the President and Senator HALE cut down the estimates $50,000,000 at the White House in fifteen minutes one day; did the gentleman hear that? [Laughter.] At any rate, Senator HALE said when he went out that that was the case. Now, another distinguished statesman, in a place that we are forbidden to mention, stated that a good business man could run this Government for $300,000,000 less than we are running it for now. How are you going to economize if you keep creating new offices all the time?

Mr. GILLETT. We have economized in this bill; it is half a million dollars less than that of last year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I congratulate the gentleman; but does he think it will be that way when it gets through both Houses?

Mr. GILLETT. I hope it will when it gets through this House, but I do not feel so confident about the other. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is not the general tendency here to increase the number of officeholders all the time?

Mr. GILLETT. Of course it is, and of course the country is growing all the time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman one more question on this point. The gentleman from Massachusetts has stated that our diplomatic business is increasing. How does it happen? There are no more nations on earth now than there were when he and I came here, are there, except the Panama Republic?

Mr. GILLETT. No; but they have more to do with each other.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How does that happen?

Mr. GILLETT. I suppose one reason is because the United States is much better known than it was. Our trade has increased tremendously and our people are traveling very much more and foreign nations are knowing us better, but it is our trade that is the main thing here, of course, which is constantly increasing—our export and import trade.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I proposed the other day to abolish this diplomatic corps and take the money they squander and give it to these consuls, and then there would be some sense in it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Illinois makes his point of order, I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] referred to a rumor that was in the air as to the manner in which the Fore River Ship and Engine Company obtained a contract for the two battle ships from the Argentine Republic—that is, that the armor manufacturers had agreed to supply armor at a greatly reduced price. The gentleman from Massachusetts, I understand, has no information about that.

Mr. GILLETT. None at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman any information as to this statement, which has been given some credence in Great Britain, and that is that the reason that these contracts were awarded to the American shipbuilding firm is that through some diplomatic arrangement the Argentine Republic has been assured that pending the construction of these two battle ships in the United States, the United States would protect it against assault by any other nation?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I have not heard that, and I would not believe it if I had.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where has the gentleman been lately? [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. I have been attending to my work in the House.

Mr. MANN. He has not been smoking a pipe, evidently.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I read that statement, sent to this country by the correspondent of a very reputable and accurate newspaper in this country.

Mr. GILLETT. I have no information upon it, and I say I utterly disbelieve it, and probably the gentleman also does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I hope the administration would not go that far, although it might intimate or suggest—whatever is the proper diplomatic term—that this country would appreciate the opportunity to build ships for the Argentine Republic. This paragraph provides for the appointment of eight officers to aid in important drafting work, and it seems to me there is some peculiar arrangement by which men appointed and confirmed by the Senate to certain diplomatic positions are to be detailed in Washington for that work. I have been unable to ascertain just how this is to come about. The gentleman will see the provision:

Eight officers to aid in important drafting work, four at salaries of $4,500 each and four at salaries of $3,000 each, and hereafter to be appointed by the Secretary of State from the diplomatic and consular services or other branch of the government service—

And so forth.

Mr. GILLETT. "Or as chief of division," the gentleman will see.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it intended that some arrangement shall be made by which important diplomatic officers shall be detached from places to which they have been appointed and assigned to work here in Washington?

Mr. GILLETT. No; as I understand, that is along the same line which I suggested a few moments ago; that it is the desire of the State Department to have the members of the diplomatic service who have been in foreign countries and who have in that way obtained a peculiar knowledge of them, come back from time to time into the State Department here in Washington and bring here the knowledge which they have obtained abroad.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what I had in mind. Are they unable by the usual methods of correspondence to send to the State Department all of the information which they acquire, or are they to reserve it within themselves?

Mr. GILLETT. The reason they are brought here is because of the information which they have and which they will communicate to the department.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, evidently the gentleman from New York does not understand that if the consular officer at Kamchatka finds a five-legged mule there he could not communicate that fact by letter, but would have to come here personally to communicate it himself.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; he would bring the mule, and it might make a great addition even in this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should not like to intimate that even a five-legged mule would not be of great importance to any of the government officers with whom I have come in contact.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the gentleman will recognize that it would be valuable to the State Department to occasionally have infused into it men who have obtained special knowledge by service abroad.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This paragraph creates a new division at an aggregate expenditure of $75,000 a year.

Mr. GILLETT. You might call it a new division; it is practically that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a bureau.

Mr. GILLETT. I forget whether it is called a bureau or a division.

Mr. GARRETT. The Secretary calls it a division.

Mr. MANN. No matter what it is called, it is really a bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the item is very clearly subject to the point of order, if the Chair is anxious to rule it out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Not yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then sustains the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from Illinois has not insisted upon his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I do not insist upon the point of order, and if I may reserve it for a moment I want to say just a word. It seems to me if there ever was an illustration of the danger of lump-sum appropriations, this is one of those illustrations. A lump-sum appropriation of $100,000 is made for the purpose of acquiring information under the provisions of a tariff law which had just been passed and therefore a bureau, called a "division" by the gentleman from Minnesota, is created in the Department of State——

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Without any authority of law and entirely outside of the scope——

Mr. TAWNEY. I would suggest the gentleman's voluntary insinuation is hardly justified, and I do not think the gentleman has any intention of misstating the facts.

Mr. MANN. I have no desire to misstate the facts, but I do desire to state the facts. But, Mr. Chairman, this is not permanent law. It is an experiment in the Department of State in connection with the work that has been carried on, and for that reason at this time I do not propose to make the point of order, but I warn the gentleman if I am here in another year from now, unless there is something to show giving good reasons for the existence of this new bureau of the Government, unless it shall have been authorized by legislation reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which has jurisdiction of the subject, and the Committee on Appropriations does not have the jurisdiction, I will make the point of order then. I now withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say a word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for a moment. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to a very peculiar provision here that is requiring the Department of State to select these officers in a special manner, "Counselor for the Department of State and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500, and each to be appointed by the Secretary of State, the one from the legal profession and the other from the grade of minister or above in the diplomatic service." Is it so necessary in the selection of a "counselor" for the State Department to insure a proper appointment that it must be provided in the act itself that he must be selected from the legal profession?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the statement of the Secretary of State, and we know nothing better. Do you?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the gentleman understands the question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes; I understand the question is, Should this officer be selected from the consular service?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I asked the gentleman if, in order to obtain a counselor, it was necessary to provide in the law that he must be selected from the legal profession.

I am calling attention to this because it shows the folly of permitting men in the departments to prepare the phraseology in which Congress is to legislate. I read a bill the other day that is supposed to have been prepared in the Attorney-General's office in which the remarkable provision is contained that it might be amended or modified "at the pleasure of Congress."

The House is familiar with what has happened to the so-called "publicity feature" of the tariff act. That provision of the tariff act was prepared under the direction of the President by the Attorney-General for the purpose of making public certain information that was to be collected. When the tariff act was under discussion it was widely proclaimed that the corporation-tax provision was not prepared and inserted in the bill because of the revenue that was to be collected, but because of the desirability of having publicity in connection with the administration of corporations.

Before the provision was prepared the country was congratulated on the fact that the President, formerly a judge of the United States circuit court, and the five great lawyers in his Cabinet, were equipped to frame legislation for the benefit of Congress, so that when a bill was passed it would accomplish exactly what was desired and intended. And the Attorney-General's office, with the assistance of these four other eminent corporation lawyers, under the supervision of the President, who had been an United States judge, prepared the corporation-tax provision of the tariff law. And when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania intimated that perhaps some slight modifications in the phraseology of that provision might be made, in order to more clearly express what Congress intended to do, it was suggested that they would be regarded in the same class as the "Black Hand insurgents" if they dared impugn the capacity of the administration to prepare bills and put them in proper shape to accomplish what was desired. Desiring to avoid that characterization, of course, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and other eminent gentlemen from some place else quickly withdrew the suggestion that perhaps those who prepared that provision did not quite appreciate what they were doing.

The tariff act was passed, and the country was congratulated on the fact that what a strenuous President had failed to accomplish for seven years had been accomplished overnight through the assistance of the Attorney-General and of the other great corporation lawyers who were collaborating in the White House with the President in framing laws that would accomplish what was desired.

And then when Congress came back from its vacation it was amazed to find that, instead of accomplishing what was desired, this corporation-tax law had been framed in such a way that it was absolutely impossible to have any publicity at all, simply because somebody did not know that public records under the law are not open to public inspection, and that if records are to be open to public inspection it is necessary to say so, instead of saying something else.

Now, the Secretary of State asks Congress to authorize him to appoint "a counselor in the Department of State," and so that there may be no misunderstanding about just what he wants he puts in the provision that he shall be "appointed from the legal profession." I am not quite sure, from what I have seen of the legal profession in connection with that corporation-tax provision in the tariff bill, that a lawyer will be obtained if needed. I have no desire, Mr. Chairman, to be a party to legislation that seems to be so ridiculous as this. Why did we not provide on the preceding page of the bill that the two assistant solicitors for the State Department and a law clerk and the law clerk's assistant should be appointed from the legal profession? Is there to be a distinction in the ability, capacity, and equipment of these counselors? So far as I am concerned, I am inclined to consider the administration in the nature of Greeks when they come suggesting the phraseology in which appropriations should be made. This paragraph may accomplish everything that is intended it should. It may only make a temporary appropriation and may perhaps not create a permanent bureau; but I am inclined to believe if the intention of those who prepared this particular paragraph is to create a temporary bureau, that, as a matter of fact, after the provision becomes a law Congress will ascertain that a permanent bureau has been created.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to interfere with the proper performance of the duty of the Department of State, and I would not set my judgment in opposition to those who are charged with the responsible duty of conducting our relations with foreign nations as to whether these officials are needed. It is difficulty to forget, however, that less than a year ago the Department of State assured Congress that it could not get along without an undersecretary of state, and Congress declined to create that office. In the absence of that undersecretary of state the department has been more active than ever before in its history, and American interests seem to be urged and forced and assisted more successfully than ever before; and yet, although, in my judgment, this is just one of those new-fangled schemes of somebody outside of the department who imagines that he possesses all the wisdom in this country and most of the wisdom in all the rest of the nations as to how this department should be reorganized, if the Secretary insists that this rearrangement is necessary, I shall not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I make the point of order, or I will reserve it.

Mr. GILLETT. I prefer that the point of order be made.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I make the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Let us have it decided. Mr. Chairman, do you wish to hear me, or do you wish to hear first gentlemen on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. The point of order should be overruled, because the law of last year says "for the maintenance of a Division of Far Eastern Affairs in the Department of State." Then, later, "a detailed statement showing the expenditures, including the salaries, under this appropriation, shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session." So that law provides for a permanent force. It provides that there shall be a new division in the department, and it recognizes that it is a permanent authorization by directing annual reports and estimates. That, I maintain, is an establishment of this division by law, and this paragraph is simply following the estimates which the previous law authorized and ordered.

Pending the decision of the Chair, if no one at this time on the other side desires to be recognized, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 22643, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 63. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the confederate veterans' reunion, to be held at Mobile, Ala., in April, 1910.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 13899. An act granting to the Hot Springs Street Railway Company, its successors and assigns, the right to maintain and operate its electric railway along the southern border of that portion of the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, known as the Whittington Lake Reserve Park; and

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6057) to amend the enlarged homestead act of February 19, 1909, in so far as it applies to the State of Oregon, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 386) thereon.

REPORT ON ORGANIZED MILITIA.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 79) providing for the printing of extra copies of the Report of the Chief Division of Militia Affairs, office of the Secretary of War, for fiscal year ended June 30, 1909, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was to strike out lines 9, 10, and 11 and in lieu to insert "the appropriation for 'arming and equipping the militia' for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Senate joint resolution 79.

Resolved, etc., That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, for the use of the War Department, 500 copies of the Report of the Chief Division of Militia Affairs, office of the Secretary of War, relative to the organized militia of the United States, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1909, the cost thereof to be charged against the appropriation for "arming and equipping the militia" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably with amendments the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 37) requiring the printing of public papers and documents from foreign countries in the English language, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, in line 5, to strike out "committee" and insert "committees;" in line 8, after the words "United States," to insert "except in cases of titles, quotations, and idioms found impracticable to translate;" and at the end of the joint resolution to add the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall prohibit the printing by Congress or the Executive and the departments of the foreign text of any documents or communications directed herein to be printed in the English language.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Senate joint resolution 37.

Resolved, etc., That all documents and papers published by order of Congress or the Executive and the departments, and all communications in print or writing made to either House of Congress or committees of Congress, or intended for general publication, made by any official or agent of the Government of the United States, except in cases of titles, quotations, and idioms found impracticable to translate, shall be printed in the English language; and all terms used in such documents or communications in which any foreign term is used to express any measurement of time, weight, distance, quantity, or value shall be given immediately following in terms used in the United States: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prohibit the printing by Congress or the Executive and the departments of the foreign text of any documents or communications directed herein to be printed in the English language.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask what is the effect of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. The only effect of it is that many times in documents from the executive departments, and also from the committees of Congress, there are terms not in the English language, and it is hard to read them. The joint resolution simply requires that those terms shall be published in the English language. I will state to the Senator——

Mr. KEAN. Does it mean that translations are to be made?

Mr. SMOOT. It does not provide for translations, but that they shall be published in English terms. I will state to the Senator that I took up the matter with every department of the Government, and asked if they had any objection to the joint resolution or whether it would interfere with them.

Mr. KEAN. I suppose all the translations will be made in the departments before sending the documents here.

Mr. SMOOT. They will all be made in the departments, and all foreign terms are to be printed in English.

Mr. GALLINGER. As well as in the foreign language.

Mr. SMOOT. As well as in the foreign language.

Mr. CARTER. Does the joint resolution contemplate the transposition of the statement of foreign coins and currency into terms as used in the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the joint resolution provides that wherever there is a coin expressed in a foreign language there shall be given in brackets, immediately following, the equivalent in the English language.

Mr. CARTER. The question arises whether the term "pounds sterling," which is an English term, would be expressed likewise, according to the terms of the joint resolution, in our money.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is an English term and that the equivalent would not be required to be expressed in brackets.

Mr. CARTER. It ought not to be required.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask the Senator about the metric system. Will the equivalent of those terms be stated?

Mr. SMOOT. The equivalent terms are to be stated. If the metric system is used, the equivalent term in English would be given.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITY PLANNING.

Mr. SMOOT. I am requested by the Committee on Printing to report favorably a hearing held before the Committee on the District of Columbia on city planning. I move that the hearing be printed as a Senate document. (S. Doc. No. 422.)

The motion was agreed to.

COURT PRACTICE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13468) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 385) thereon. As this bill is precisely like Senate bill 3257, which is on the calendar, I move that the Senate bill be taken from the calendar and indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator have the calendar number of the Senate bill before him?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The calendar number is 345.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest to the Senator that our usual custom is to give the House bill the same position on the calendar that the Senate bill occupies.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly; I make that request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks that the House bill be substituted on the calendar for Senate bill 3257, and that action on the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed. Without objection, that order is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. The House bill will take the same place on the calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The same place on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move that the bill (S. 4503) to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, savings banks, trust companies, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BACON. I should like to know what is the purpose in having the bill recommitted. The reason why I ask the question is that it is one for the passage of which there seems to be very urgent demand. I presume, of course, the Senator has some good reason.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I quite agree with the Senator from Georgia that there is very urgent demand for the passage of this bill; but information has been presented to members of the committee since the bill was reported which bears upon it, and it is for the purpose of giving a further hearing and securing what to the committee seems to be valuable information that they desire to have it recommitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont to recommit the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF SATURDAY'S SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent that no business be transacted at the session to-morrow outside of the special order in connection with the reception of the statue of Mr. Calhoun, and that that special order be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. Let the request be stated.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not hear what the request was.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request was that on to-morrow the special order in relation to the Calhoun statue shall be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal, and that no business other than the special order shall be transacted to-morrow. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is entered.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as first in order on the calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 11, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Father of all souls, whose love is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. Thou hast touched our hearts with sorrow, because Thou hast taken from our midst one whom we all loved and admired. A man of large parts, as a lawyer he rose to eminence; as a historian he wrought a good work; as a representative of the people on the floor of this House he made himself conspicuous for his wisdom, fidelity, and earnestness of purpose.

We thank Thee for his life, for what he did, and we pray that his memory may ever be an incentive to clean living and honest endeavor.

We can not solve the riddle of life or death, but we can put our trust in Thee.

> We know not what the future hath
> Of marvel or surprise,
> Assured alone that life and death
> His mercy underlies.

Be very near, we beseech Thee, to his colleagues, friends, and the stricken wife, who has walked by his side through the years that have bound them together in love. Help them and her to look forward to a bright beyond, where the mysteries will be solved and happiness reign supreme. And everlasting praise be Thine, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE PERKINS, OF NEW YORK.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce the death of my late colleague, the Hon. JAMES BUCK PERKINS. Of his private character, his many personal virtues, his high public service, his faithfulness to his duty, I shall not now take the time to speak, but shall ask the House at some future day to set aside an hour to pay tribute to the character of the deceased.

The crowning victory of his life, showing his high sense of public duty, appeared in the last request that he made, that while, if desired, an announcement of his death might be made in the House, he especially desired that no adjournment take place, but that the usual business of the House proceed until the usual hour of adjournment.

I believe there is no precedent in the history of the House where a Member has asked or made such a request. I understand there was one such request in the case of Thomas H. Benton, who had ceased to be a Member of the House before his death. We can not commend too highly this disinterested act of private abasement to public duty exhibited by this request.

At about the usual hour of adjournment I shall make a motion to adjourn in honor of his memory and for the appointment of the necessary arrangements for his funeral.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a pamphlet entitled "Isthmian Canal," by H. H. Rousseau, civil engineer of the United States Navy and a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, be printed as a public document. I do not know the experience of other Members, but for some time past I have been receiving from one to three requests in each mail for this document. It is entirely exhausted by the Canal Commission.

Mr. GARRETT. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks to have printed as a public document the following, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Isthmian Canal, by H. H. Rousseau, civil engineer, United States Navy, member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, presented at the twentieth annual session of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, held at Denver, Colo., August 16–21, 1909.

Mr. GARRETT. Are there any illustrations in it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from Michigan that while I shall not object in this instance, a request of this kind ought to go to the Committee on Printing in order that it may have careful scrutiny and that unnecessary printing may not be done. I trust that hereafter these matters will be referred. I understand that this will not be an expensive document to print, and as it is a valuable one, I shall not object in this instance.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that I do not know what is in this document.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a speech on the Panama Canal.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It may be a valuable document, but we have a committee in the House on printing that has in it the power to recommend the printing of such documents as they deem of value.

I think that when the House gives unanimous consent without a knowledge of what is in a document, that printing at the public expense is going too far. If the gentleman from Michigan thinks it is a proper document to be printed, and a valuable document, the Committee on Printing ought to pass upon it. I am not willing to consent to its being printed without going to the proper committee of the House, and I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that the document be referred to the Committee on Printing?

There was no objection.

THE TELEPOST BILL.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 19402, generally known as the "telepost bill." I ask for 1,000 copies.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the reprint of a bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19402) to enable the Telepost Company to construct its plant and operate the same and transact its business in the District of Columbia, and to make the necessary connections with other parts of its system.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has made application to have extra copies of this bill printed? He can have that done without an order of the House.

Mr. PEARRE. No; I will say to the gentleman that I have not made application for printing the additional number.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not require an order of the House to have additional copies printed.

Mr. PEARRE. It is customary, Mr. Speaker. There has been a great demand for copies of this bill and the number is exhausted. I thought it was wise to ask unanimous consent of the House for a reprint of a thousand copies.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to have additional copies printed, of course I do not care, but I will say to the gentleman that under the recent practice of the House, since the last revision was made in the printing law, all he needs to do is to inform the superintendent of the document room and he will get all of the copies that he requires.

Mr. PEARRE. Any number?

Mr. MANN. To any number as long as there is a demand for it.

Mr. PEARRE. I do not understand that the gentleman from Illinois objects to unanimous consent being granted at this time?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not object at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT SIBLEY, MO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 6662) to authorize the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River in the neighborhood of Sibley, Mo., and to remove the existing structure, which the Clerk read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with its railway, and in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, a new bridge across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in the neighborhood of Sibley, Mo., and in the vicinity of its existing bridge now constructed and maintained under authority of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, chapter 349: Provided, That the superstructure and piers of the existing bridge shall be completely removed down to a plane of 15 feet below standard low water within one year from the date of completion of the new bridge herein authorized.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a similar House bill has already been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and is on the House Calendar. I ask that this Senate bill be passed and the House bill (H. R. 21830) lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the similar House bill will lie upon the table.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 22643).

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. When the committee rose yesterday there was a point of order pending to the paragraph on pages 45 and 46 of the bill, which paragraph the Chair will ask the Clerk to report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Director of the consular service, $4,500; counselor for the Department of State, and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500 and each to be appointed by the Secretary of State, the one from the legal profession and the other from the grade of minister or above in the diplomatic service; eight officers to aid in important drafting work, four at salaries of $4,500 each and four at salaries of $3,000 each, and hereafter to be appointed by the Secretary of State from the diplomatic and consular services or other branch of the government service, and to be employed upon tariff, treaty, and trade relations and negotiations or as chief of division of far eastern, Latin-American, near eastern, or European affairs, or upon other work in connection with foreign relations: Provided, That in cases of selection from the foreign service the salary paid shall in no case exceed that of the post from which the diplomatic or consular officer detailed to the department has been taken; assistant solicitor, $3,000; law clerk, $2,500; 1 clerk of class 4; 3 clerks of class 3; 2 clerks of class 1 (one of whom shall be a telegraph operator); 3 clerks at $1,000 each; 3 assistant messengers; for the rent of rooms outside of the Department of State to accommodate the Bureau of Trade Relations and the Bureau of Accounts or other offices, not to exceed $5,500; for meeting occasional and unforeseen expenses arising in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State under tariff legislation and otherwise and in the negotiation and preparation of treaties, arrangements, and agreements for the advancement of commercial and other interests, including the appointment of necessary employees at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected and their compensation fixed by the Secretary of State, and to be expended under his direction, $25,340; in all, $100,000. A detailed statement showing expenditures, including salaries or rates of compensation paid under the last item of this appropriation, shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman in charge of the bill claims that this paragraph is not subject to a point of order because of a paragraph in the deficiency bill of 1909, and the Chair will ask the Clerk to report that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State, under tariff legislation and otherwise, and in the negotiation and preparation of treaties, arrangements, and agreements for the advancement of commercial and other interests of the United States, and for the maintenance of a division of far-eastern affairs in the Department of State, including the payment of necessary employees, at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected, and their compensation fixed, by the Secretary of State and to be expended under his direction, fiscal year 1910, $100,000. A detailed statement showing expenditures, including salaries or rates of compensation paid under this appropriation, shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session; and estimates for further appropriations hereunder shall include in detail salaries for all persons to be employed and paid in the Department of State at Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. In so far as the paragraph against which the point of order is made complies with the provisions of this paragraph in the deficiency act just read, the paragraph in question is not subject to a point of order. That is to say, in so far as the paragraph provides:

For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State, under tariff legislation and otherwise, and in the negotiation and preparation of treaties, arrangements, and agreements for the advancement of commercial and other interests of the United States, and for the maintenance of a division of far-eastern affairs in the Department of State—

And in so far as it provides for—the necessary employees at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected and their compensation fixed by the Secretary of State and to be expended under his direction—the paragraph to that extent is not subject to a point of order. In so far as its provisions do not comply with the provisions in the deficiency bill, if it contains any such provision, it is subject to a point of order.

The concluding sentences of the paragraph from the deficiency bill—

A detailed statement showing expenditures, including salaries or rates of compensation paid under this appropriation, shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session, and estimates for further appropriation hereunder shall include in detail the salaries for all persons to be employed and paid in the Department of State—in the opinion of the Chair, was intended to and does necessarily establish a permanent department, bureau, or division, whatever you may see fit to call it, in the State Department, because it provides for estimates to be furnished and submitted on the first day, not of the next session, or of any particular session, but on the first day of each regular session. In other words, it contemplates annual appropriations hereafter for the maintenance of a bureau or department, the functions of which are defined in the preceding part of the paragraph.

The question, then, is whether or not there are any provisions in the paragraph against which the point of order has been made which are in violation of the rule, in that they are not saved by the provisions of the paragraph in the deficiency act which has just been cited.

In the opinion of the Chair there are some such provisions, as, for instance, "director of the consular service, $4,500." The Chair is not advised whether or not this office is in connection with the carrying out of the provisions of the department created by the deficiency act. If it is, it is not subject to a point of order. If it is not, it is subject to a point of order as being legislation.

Counselor for the Department of State and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500, and each to be appointed by the Secretary of State, the one from the legal profession and the other from the grade of minister or above in the diplomatic service.

That is undoubtedly legislation. It does not comply with the provisions of the paragraph in the deficiency bill, in that it qualifies or limits the power of the Secretary to make the appointment. In other words, it provides that the officers shall be appointed, one from the legal profession, and the other from the grade of minister or above in the diplomatic service, when there is no such limitation of the Secretary's authority in the paragraph in the deficiency act.

Eight officers to aid in important drafting work, four at salaries of $4,500 each and four at salaries of $3,000 each, and hereafter to be appointed by the Secretary of State from the diplomatic and consular services or other branch of the government service—is legislation by reason of the use of the word "hereafter," and because, also, it is a limitation upon the power of the Secretary to appoint, inconsistent with the power conferred in the paragraph in the deficiency bill. And so on, not to enlarge. The last paragraph—

A detailed statement showing expenditures, including salaries or rates of compensation paid under the last item of this appropriation shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session—is undoubtedly legislation. For these reasons the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I submit in place of the paragraph which has been stricken out the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Advancement of commercial and other interests as provided in the act approved August 5, 1909:

"Counselor for the Department of State and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500, and each to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1909; eight officers to aid in important drafting work, four at salaries of $4,500 each and four at salaries of $3,000 each, to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the act approved August 5, 1909, and to be employed upon tariff, treaty, and trade relations and negotiations, any one of whom may be employed as chief of division of far eastern, Latin-American, near eastern, or European affairs, or upon other work in connection with foreign relations; assistant solicitor, at a salary of $3,000; law clerk, at a salary of $2,500; one clerk of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; three assistant messengers; for rent of rooms outside of the Department of State to accommodate the Bureau of Trade Relations and the Bureau of Accounts or other offices, not to exceed $5,500; for meeting occasional and unforeseen expenses arising in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State under tariff legislation and otherwise and in the negotiation and preparation of treaties, arrangements, and agreements for the advancement of commercial and other interests, including the appointment of necessary employees at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected and compensated under the provisions of the said act of August 5, 1909, $25,340; in all, $100,000."

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. I would like to hear the gentleman explain the difference between the present amendment and the paragraph just stricken out.

Mr. GILLETT. The present amendment follows strictly the act of August 5, 1909.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman the act of August 5 here?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. The Clerk read it a few moments ago.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the act of August 5 provide for the creation of these specific cases?

Mr. GILLETT. No.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It merely provides in a general way for a lump sum for this organization?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is a very great distinction between the creation of a particular bureau and providing for a lump-sum appropriation for men to carry out a specific work, and the creation of specific offices. Now, we have created a Department of Justice. There have been at different times general appropriations for extra services in the Department of Justice, but because we have a Department of Justice that is provided for by law does not authorize Congress in an appropriation bill to create a new office in the Department of Justice. This amendment the gentleman offers creates a number of different offices. The distinction is very great. If we create these offices by law, and the President appoints these men to fill the offices, and Congress the next year refuses to appropriate the money for their salaries, they could go into the Court of Claims and establish a claim and sue the Government and recover for their salaries.

On the other hand, if Congress meant to continue the blanket appropriation for a certain class of work and then discontinued that appropriation, the men who are appointed under that, or who have been employed under that blanket appropriation, would go out of office the minute the appropriation was withdrawn, and the office would exist no longer. So I think there is a very great distinction between the two propositions, and it seems to me that the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is clearly well made, when the chairman of the committee attempts in an appropriation bill to create certain specific offices named in the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, under the ruling made by the Chair, it seems to me it is hardly necessary to answer the gentleman from Alabama. The act, which he perhaps has not read, of August 5 particularly provides for the maintenance of a division of far eastern affairs, and so forth, and then it says:

A detailed statement * * * and estimates for further appropriations thereunder shall include in detail salaries for all persons to be employed and paid in the Department of State.

There is an express authorization.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the gentleman does not draw the distinction between Congress doing this in a proper and orderly way by passing a bill coming from its committee, creating these offices in pursuance of a former law, and the creation of them upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GILLETT. They have already been created.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; they have not. There is no office created under that act at all. It merely provides for a department.

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly; provides for a division, and makes an appropriation at the same time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not create any specific office, as I said. It provides for the employment of a number of people, but Congress under that can withdraw that appropriation at any moment, and those men will go out of office. If you pass this amendment, Congress could withdraw the appropriation, and the men would still stay in office and could establish their claim against the Government for their salaries in the Court of Claims. It is a very different proposition.

Mr. GILLETT. But the original act authorized the Secretary of State to appoint these officers and to make a detailed statement of their salaries, and he has done so, and now we are carrying out what is already authorized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the act, it does not designate any particular officers at any particular salary.

Mr. GILLETT. No; it gives him the authority to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It gives him authority to employ a number of clerks. You can call them whatever you please.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Clerks or officers or anything else; but it is a mere appropriation for clerical hire. That is a very different thing from creating specific offices.

Mr. GILLETT. It says nothing about clerical hire.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a very different proposition from the creation of specific offices.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as I understood the ruling of the Chair, it was not that the first part of the paragraph in the appropriation bill of last summer authorized this appropriation or authorized these places, but that the appropriation in connection with that part of the paragraph requiring the Secretary of State to submit a detailed statement to Congress of the amounts used by him in payment of salaries and otherwise, authorized the setting up of this bureau, or division, as the gentleman from Minnesota calls it. Of course that provision contains a direction that the Secretary of State should fix the salaries, and it is a query in my mind whether the direction to the Secretary of State to fix the salary and then to submit an estimate to Congress, the latter being sufficient authority for the appropriation, is not a sufficient authority for the fixing of the salaries in the appropriation.

I am not so sure about that, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] whether he thinks the authority to create a far eastern division or the chief of a division of far eastern affairs, whatever the language is, is a sufficient authority to create a Latin American and a near eastern or a European division of affairs? I want to know where that authority is. I should suppose that the provision including a division of far eastern affairs was in itself an exclusion of a Latin American, near eastern, or a European division of affairs.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is the same old thing, giving an inch and taking an ell. You have given permission to have a far eastern division or bureau, and they will add one down in South America.

Mr. MANN. I believe myself it is easy enough to get around the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be a scientific parliamentarian, but it strikes me very forcibly that the amendment is in direct opposition to section 2 of Rule XXI, which provides that no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law. Now then, the proponents of the amendment bottom the present amendment upon an act contained in the urgent deficiency bill passed last August. Reading from that act, it nowhere provides for the establishment of any office whatever.

For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State, under tariff legislation and otherwise—

And so forth.

There is not an office created by that act. There was, as I recollect, a lump sum appropriated to enable the Secretary of State to carry out certain provisions in relation to the tariff act in the act of last August.

As bearing upon this I desire to call the attention of the Chair to section 3664 of Hinds's Parliamentary Precedents, volume 4, which, I think, relates very closely to it:

Propositions to increase salaries fixed by law, or appropriate for offices not established by law, are subject to a point of order.

Now, recurring again to what I said a moment ago, that the proponents of the measure seek to bottom the present amendment upon a law that was passed last August, when the bill is examined it is plainly discerned that no office was created in it whatever.

On March 27, 1906, the legislative appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the Clerk read:

Office of assistant treasurer at New Orleans: For assistant treasurer, $4,500; chief clerk and cashier, $2,250; receiving teller and paying teller, at $2,000 each—

And so forth.

After debate the Chairman held that the items were not specified in the statute, and therefore were not in order.

Now, I call the attention of the Chair to section 3697, which I believe to be a direct authority upon the subject:

The mere appropriation for a salary does not thereby create an office so as to justify appropriations in succeeding years.

I believe the point of order is well taken, because I think it contravenes the plain terms of section 2 of Rule XXI. I believe it is well taken because there is no law which heretofore has established these offices. I believe it is well taken because it contravenes all the well-defined precedents heretofore decided by many Speakers of this House and Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, just a word regarding the suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] and in accordance with that made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Under the act of last year it is clear to my mind that the Congress intended to create a permanent division in the State Department. It also provided a specific appropriation for a definite purpose, and that purpose was for the advancement of the commercial and other interests of the United States. There could not be broader language applying to a broad subject than the very language of the act.

Now, the objection made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], that the detailed statement in the present amendment is objectionable, is overcome by the fact that at the conclusion of the appropriation item for the Department of State in the urgent deficiency bill of August 5 last this provision occurs:

A detailed statement showing expenditures, including the salaries or the rates of compensation under this appropriation shall be reported to Congress by the Secretary of State on the first day of each regular session.

Now, what was the purpose of compelling the Secretary of State to make a detailed report to the Congress of the expenditures made?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To show that none of the money was stolen.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Which, I assure the gentleman from Alabama, will never occur as long as the State Department is under the supervision and control of the present Secretary of State.

Now, couple that suggestion regarding the report of expenditures with the further one that the Secretary of State is compelled also to furnish estimates for further appropriations, and what is the conclusion? Further appropriations for what purpose? "Further appropriations hereunder," further appropriations authorized by this particular legislation, and no other. Now, what is the purpose? It is to compel a rendering to the Congress an account in the form of estimates for further appropriations. Was it not the ultimate purpose to enable Congress, in passing upon those estimates, to specify what items should be stricken out and what items should be allowed to remain in the appropriation bills? And does not the obligation imposed upon the Secretary of State to report to Congress the various items of expenditure, carry with it also an obligation upon the Congress, in justice to itself, to specify those items in the appropriation bill?

And is it not rather a matter of commendation, so far as the gentleman's amendment is concerned, that it gives to this House an opportunity to exercise its jurisdiction and its power in going into details with reference to this expenditure rather than doing that which the gentleman from Alabama admits can be done under this legislation, appropriate the whole lump sum of $100,000 without any qualification whatever under the law as it now exists?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania overlooks the fact entirely in his argument that we have a rule, Rule XXI, which provides that this legislation shall be done in a different way from being placed on an appropriation bill. I do not deny we are going to have this bureau, and he will have to determine what officers will be needed and fix their salaries, but that is not the proper way to do that, and that is the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama that the rule prohibits the enactment of general legislation upon appropriation bills, but the gentleman is just as aware as any gentleman who ever occupied a seat in this House that that rule does not always obtain. It did not obtain in the last deficiency appropriation bill because extraordinary conditions were existing in this country at that time. We had just enacted new tariff legislation, and there were conditions existing under which it seemed absolutely essential that provision should be made in various departments of the Government in order that that great law might be carried out in its details and provisions.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But the gentleman will agree, will he not, that up to the present time there has been no office whatever created?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No; the gentleman will not agree that there has been no office created.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, what office has been created?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree to this: That the Congress authorized the expenditure of $100,000 for the broad and general purpose which I have mentioned, and manifestly that money could not be expended without the employment of some individuals for that purpose.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, when the Congress passed that act and appropriated that money, did it say what the officers should be?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It said it should be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of State.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But did it name a single officer?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It did not name the officers, but it was broader than if it had named the specific officers.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman agree that up to the present there has been any office created, even under the act passed last August?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana will permit me, I desire to say there is an error there. Congress authorized the Secretary, or rather, Congress authorized the creation of a certain division in the State Department. It authorized the Secretary of State to select the necessary employees for the purpose of carrying out the work of that division.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. It also authorized the Secretary of State to fix their compensation. Now, any position or any employees whom the Secretary of State deems necessary to carry out the work of this division which Congress has authorized, that position has been created by authority of Congress through the Secretary of State.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit in that connection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman contend that under the act he has just cited that it is broad enough to establish the office of some officer called a "director of the consular service" and another——

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; I do.

Mr. COX of Indiana (continuing). And another "resident diplomatic officer?"

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; I do; he is an employee; just what the act of August 5, 1909, authorizes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman further contend that the act passed last August did create the office of director of the consular service and resident diplomatic officer?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it authorizes the Secretary of State——

Mr. COX of Indiana. But nowhere gives him the name.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). To employ as many officers or employees as necessary to carry on the work of the division which was created by authority of law.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But the act of August never fixed any of their salaries.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; but it authorized somebody else to do so.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, I do not know whether it did or not. I doubt whether the language is that broad.

Mr. TAWNEY. In express terms the act authorized the Secretary of State to fix their salaries. It not only did that, but the act itself goes on and requires the Secretary of State to report to Congress the expenditure under this authority and to submit detailed estimates to Congress for the purpose of enabling Congress to make exact and necessary appropriations to carry on the work of this division for the next fiscal year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman would not segregate the closing part of the act of last August and say that that and that alone was the organic law, would he?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would not; no.

Mr. COX of Indiana. You would take the entire act, would you not?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would take the entire act together, because, clearly, the implication in the latter part of the paragraph is made that these salaries, as fixed by the Secretary of State under authority of Congress, are the salaries and places he has to estimate for for the fiscal year 1911, and that he has done, and that clearly implies that we are, in reporting the appropriation to the House, to report specific appropriations instead of a lump sum.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not like the implication at all. I want the positive statute.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman know that the sustaining of his contention would open the door to more evils than the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman does not. There are abundant committees here who have the power and ability to frame laws.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And a very able committee prepared and framed this law that is under discussion.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Frame and present it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and present it, and in further accordance with that spirit, this committee compelled the Secretary of State to report back to them at the beginning of each session in the form of estimates.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not think that adds anything to it at all.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do not really quite understand the gentleman's complaint—whether it is against the expenditure of this money or not. If it is, it is one thing. If it is for the hiring of employees who are justified under the emergencies of the Government, it is another thing. Now, will the gentleman indicate to which one of these conditions he directs his objection?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I will gladly do it. I put it upon both grounds. First, in my judgment, the needless expenditure of money along this line; second, because, as I understand it and as I stated it to be, it is a direct infringement of clause 2, Rule XXI, and in open opposition to all the precedents of the House.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman and I disagree on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is familiar with the precedents cited by the gentleman from Indiana. Undoubtedly the creation of a new office or the increase of a salary over that fixed by law would be subject to a point of order under clause 2 of Rule XXI. But those precedents do not seem to the Chair to be applicable to this case at all. The act of August 5, 1909, created a new division in the State Department. It defined its functions in the most generous terms, and there is no provision in the amendment now offered that does not have direct relation to the carrying out of those functions. Not only that, but it provided for the payment of salaries, and delegated to the Secretary of State the selection of the officers to receive the salaries. Of course, that includes the definition of the duties and the fixing of their salaries. Then it provided for the appropriation by Congress thereafter for the payment of those salaries to those officers, not necessarily by name, but to the officers fulfilling those functions from time to time, not for one year or two years, but during the life of the division. So that it seems very clear to the Chair that there is nothing provided for in this amendment that is not within the direct terms of the act of August 5, 1909.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Chair permit one suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. It seems in the hearing before the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department that the Secretary of State or his assistant, especially, did not construe that law as being permanent law and a permanent authorization for the establishment of this bureau. I would like to call the Chair's attention to this question. In reference to the $100,000 carried for this purpose in the urgent deficiency bill last August Mr. Wilson, Assistant Secretary of State, made this answer:

> We have two lump funds at present, Mr. HAMLIN. The emergency fund we have had since 1886, and then at the extra session $100,000 was appropriated, about which the Secretary was talking, and which we are now seeking to have put in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill for the purpose of making permanent certain posts which have been found necessary in the reorganization of the department and leaving about $25,000 still unallotted for the purposes specified in the original appropriation, but available for employing extra services in the District on occasions. The latter is one of the purposes for which the emergency fund is not available.

Now, the purpose seems to be to put this item in this particular bill for the purpose of making it a permanent bureau. Now, it seems to me, the Secretary himself did not consider or construe that authorization in the urgent deficiency bill last August was sufficient to make this a permanent bureau in his department. He seeks to make it permanent by the authorization in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There can be no doubt in the mind of anyone who reads the act of August 5, 1909, that it provided a permanent division in the State Department. The Chair thinks the gentleman is misinformed as to the opinion of the Secretary upon that subject.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am reading from his own testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. On a side matter. The Chair, of course, will hear the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not want to talk about the point of order, if that is already settled.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee except the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The amendment is before the committee. I am against the original amendment and against the section. I am against it because I believe it not to be correct in principle. In the short session of the Sixtieth Congress the increase of offices in the office of Secretary of State was thoroughly thrashed out, and at last it was decided in favor of not creating these new officers in the office of the Secretary of State. There was not a man in the House that did not know precisely what he was doing when he voted on that question, because it was up here half a dozen times. Also speeches were made about it, and it was the deliberate conclusion of the House that these officers were not needed.

This section is a deliberate attempt to whip the devil around the stump. You call these new officers by another name, and you undertake to get them that way. A lump sum of an increase in the appropriation of $100,000. There has not been a syllable of evidence produced to this House that justifies a single one of these salaries. While that uproar was going on here about the undersecretary, and so forth, one evening, I was going down on the street car and a newspaper man gave me this very illuminating information:

He said that the reason they wanted these new officers created in the office of Secretary of State, and also the reason that they wanted to qualify Senator Knox to be Secretary of State—which I still say they never have done—was that President Taft had an extraordinarily high opinion of the then Senator Knox, and wanted to get him into his Cabinet and make him a sort of Deputy President. That is, he was going to unload on Secretary Knox a fourth, a third, or a half, or as much as he wanted to, of the duties, minor duties you may call them, so that it would give the President himself ample time to devote his intellectual energies to the greater questions of statesmanship. That was proposition No. 1, given why he wanted Knox as Secretary of State; and the reason that Secretary Knox wanted these six new officers created in the office of Secretary was that he might unload a large part of his duties as Secretary of State onto the undersecretary and these new functionaries, that he might have ample time to devote himself to his duty as Assistant President of the United States.

That is proposition No. 2.

Well, now, we fought him on proposition No. 1 and were rolled on his undertaking to qualify Senator Knox to be Secretary of State. But when it came to proposition No. 2, we rolled them. It seems, when this deficiency bill came in, it slipped in here when nobody was paying any particular attention to what was going on, and made this provision in the deficiency bill. Now they come in and claim that the language of the bill makes this division or bureau, or whatever you please to call it, permanent.

I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, or the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has this thing in charge, how they happened to give to the Secretary of State the right to fix salaries in his department?

Mr. GILLETT. Why, the House did that last summer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But what made the House do it? That is exactly what I am asking.

Mr. GILLETT. The debate last summer will show that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the general deficiency appropriation bill, which carried the item for the State Department, authorized the creation of this bureau, and appropriated $100,000 for the service necessary during the remainder of the fiscal year 1910, was passed on the last day of the session. It became law on the last day of the session.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; when everything was in an uproar, and nobody paying any attention.

Mr. TAWNEY. Nobody could tell how many clerks and employees would be necessary to carry on the work of that division. The necessity requiring the creation of the division was shown the same day the appropriation bill became a law. Therefore it was necessary to appropriate the money and authorize the employment of those necessary during the remainder of this fiscal year. Then we required a detailed statement of the expenditures under the appropriation, and we required an estimate for next year of all employees required at the seat of Government. Now, that was fully discussed at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, let us see what the situation is. The President of the United States has been clamoring for economy. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee has made a hundred speeches within my hearing in favor of economy.

Mr. TAWNEY. Without effect.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. TAWNEY. Without effect on the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have always attempted to help him.

Mr. TAWNEY. Except when you were trying to appropriate $500,000 for flying machines.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I never voted for a flying machine.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, the gentleman did; he voted for balloons on the army appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I never voted for any balloons or flying machines or anything of the sort. The truth is, nobody could induce me to go up in one of the things. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. TAWNEY] has made a great many speeches in favor of economy. As I stated yesterday by way of a question, Senator HALE had a conversation with the President not long ago at the White House, and when he came out he announced, with "his eye in fine phrensy rolling," to that bunch of newspaper men up there that he and the President had just cut down the appropriation bills $50,000,000; and the other day Senator ALDRICH said he could take the Government and run it for $300,000,000 less than it now costs and lose nothing in efficiency.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Why does he not do it? He is running the country, is he not?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If he could do it, I am not certain but I might be in favor of giving him carte blanche to do it. to do it.

Mr. TAWNEY. That statement has been made so frequently, without any qualification whatever, that I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that $300,000,000 is in excess of the total expenditures of the Government for all civil purposes; and if the gentleman from Missouri, or any other man, says that the Government can be conducted for $300,000,000 less than at present, if conducted according to modern business methods, he is simply talking through his hat, without knowledge of the facts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not saying you can do it for $300,000,000 less, but I am simply saying what the boss of the Republican party said a good business man could do it for. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I have a great deal of respect for Senator ALDRICH'S headpiece.

Mr. TAWNEY. If $300,000,000 is in excess of the total expenditures for all civil purposes, how could you or any other man do it? I concede a great saving might be accomplished by the adoption of modern business methods, but that a saving in excess of the total cost of administering all the civil expenditures is simply ridiculous.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not confining it to civil purposes. I will tell you how to save $24,000,000 dead easy. Muster out the 12,000 troops that there are in the Philippine Islands and save the $24,000,000 annually. It will be the best trade ever made by a nation since the morning stars first sang together for joy. Instead of building two battle ships, at $12,000,000 apiece, build one or build none.

Mr. TAWNEY. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, when I am right, why do you not help me?

Mr. TAWNEY. When I am right, why does not the gentleman from Missouri help me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do; and we generally are rolled together. But what I am saying is this: If there is a necessity for economy, the State Department is just as good a place as anywhere else to economize. Now, let us see what these offices are that you are practically creating:

Counselor for the Department of State and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500, and to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1909.

I do not believe there is a man in the House who can give an intelligent opinion about what this resident diplomatic officer is to do. Is he to be a useful public functionary, or is he to be simply ornamental? What is this counselor going to do?

Mr. HENRY W. PALMER. Lots.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What?

Mr. GOULDEN. Draw his salary.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who is he going to counsel—Congress or the Secretary of State?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to print the amendment as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Page 44, line 12, insert:

"Advancement of commercial and other interests, as provided in the act approved August 5, 1909:

"'Counselor for the Department of State and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500, and to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1909; eight officers to aid in important drafting work, four at salaries of $4,500 each and four at salaries of $3,000 each, to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the act approved August 5, 1909, and to be employed upon tariff, treaty, and trade relations and negotiations, any one of whom may be employed as chief of division of far eastern, Latin-American, near eastern, or European affairs, or upon other work in connection with foreign relations; assistant solicitor, at a salary of $3,000; law clerk, at a salary of $2,500; 1 clerk of class 4; 3 clerks of class 3; 2 clerks of class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 3 assistant messengers; for rent of rooms outside of the Department of State to accommodate the Bureau of Trade Relations and the Bureau of Accounts or other offices, not to exceed $5,500; for meeting occasional and unforeseen expenses arising in connection with foreign trade relations which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of State under tariff legislation and otherwise, and in the negotiation and preparation of treaties, arrangements and agreements for the advancement of commercial and other interests, including the appointment of necessary employees at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected and compensated under the provisions of the said act of August 5, 1909, $25,340; in all, $100,000.'"

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. The bill passed last August in no way fixes the amount of the salaries. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts undertakes to fix the specific amount of each salary. Now, the inquiry I wish to make is, Who has fixed these salaries? Did the Secretary of State do it, or did the Committee on Appropriations do it?

Mr. GILLETT. The Secretary of State made the recommendation to us, and we fixed them according to his recommendation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The Committee on Appropriations simply followed the recommendations of the Secretary of State upon that point. Is that correct?

Mr. GILLETT. We did, as far as they conformed to our judgment. If I recollect right, we reduced one or two of them, but I am not certain about that.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The law specifically named each of the officers, and did the Secretary of State fix the salary of each?

Mr. GILLETT. It came in in the Book of Estimates, as required by the law of 1905.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did the Committee of Appropriations follow the recommendation of the Secretary of State as to the designation of each office?

Mr. GILLETT. I think it did.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then the whole thing was fixed by the Secretary of State?

Mr. GILLETT. The designation was as provided by law.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And the salaries?

Mr. GILLETT. In nearly, if not all, of the cases.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to get some information. I find that all the seven other members of the Cabinet have a salary fixed at $12,000 a year, the only exception being the Secretary of State. I would like to know why that office is discriminated against at this time and why it should not be changed to $12,000?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from New York must remember the reason it was fixed at $8,000 last year, and that amount was put in this bill for the same reason.

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes; I know the reasons assigned a year ago, but I wanted to know if it was for the same reason that existed last year, and if the committee did not think it would be justified, legally, in doing so now?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad if the salary of the Secretary of State was fixed in this bill at $12,000. Whatever may have been the effect or the doubts in the minds of some of us as to the repeal of the law that raised the salary of the Secretary of State and other Cabinet officers to $12,000, that has passed by, and it is conceded on every hand that the Secretary of State is properly occupying that high office under the Constitution.

Now, there is no reason existing why he should not have the salary fixed at least equal to that of the other Cabinet officers, and I call attention at this time to paragraph 2, section 6, of the first article of the Constitution.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The substance of it is that he can not participate in a salary increased during his term of office in Congress, and that is the reason why we do not increase it now.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Knox is now properly filling the office of Secretary of State. The paragraph of the Constitution referred to reads as follows:

> No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time.

That paragraph would have prevented Mr. Knox becoming Secretary of State if the law that was passed during his term had not been repealed or amended, so far as it affected the salary of the Secretary of State. But we undertook to deal with that question, and settled it; and, so far as the country is concerned, I guess everybody is reconciled to it, and he is now constitutionally Secretary of State. There is no reason why we should not fix his salary now as well as fix the salary of any other officer or member of the Cabinet.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Would not he then be a beneficiary of the increase made while he was in office?

Mr. KEIFER. No; he would be the beneficiary of a law that we pass now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The law could not change the Constitution.

Mr. KEIFER. It would not change the Constitution, because there is constitutional authority to change the salary of all Cabinet officers now.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the Constitution fix the salary at $8,000?

Mr. KEIFER. No; the Constitution does not fix it at all; the law fixes it. His salary is $8,000, while the other Cabinet officers' salaries are $12,000, as fixed by law.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman contends that his appointment was legal and constitutional, and therefore could be changed to the same salary as the other Cabinet officers?

Mr. KEIFER. He is now Secretary of State, and I say that we can now fix his salary by law as we can the salary of any other Cabinet officer. Is that disputed?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Reading the amendment, I see it provides an appropriation of $25,000 for some possible unforeseen emergency that may arise in the future.

Could the gentleman inform the committee under what conditions some unforeseen emergency may arise whereby that appropriation, or any part of it, may be needed?

Mr. KEIFER. That is off the line that I was talking. I was talking about the salary of the Secretary of State.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, the gentleman is a member of the committee, and that is the reason I put the question to him.

Mr. KEIFER. I am a member of the committee, but I can not answer that question now. I refer the gentleman to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], in charge of the bill.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. If the gentleman will permit me, I think I can answer it. That contemplates to amend the Constitution so that the Secretary can get the balance of the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], a question. The offices provided for in the paragraph are the same that were appropriated for under the appropriation of last August?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; practically the same. There may be some slight changes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will ask the gentleman how his committee reached the conclusion that it would require $100,000 to pay the expense of this Bureau of Trade Relations for the next fiscal year?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman means how we decided last summer?

Mr. HAMLIN. How the committee decided now. This bill carries $100,000.

Mr. GILLETT. We have decided it by the advice of the Secretary of State, of course.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to call the committee's attention to the fact that on the 9th of February the Secretary of State on being interrogated in relation to this matter testified in answer to a question propounded by a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department:

> Now, on page 58 of the same hearings the total for salaries seemed to be $9,404.32.
> Mr. KNOX. That is up to the beginning of the present session of Congress. These offices were created only a few weeks before Congress convened [referring to these offices now under consideration], and the law requires that the expenditures be reported to Congress at the beginning of each session, so I am telling you what the expenditures were up to the 6th of December. They amount to $75,000 per year, including $4,500 rent that we have to pay for the Bureau of Trade Relations and the Bureau of Accounts.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. HAMLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I see the gentleman is holding in his hand a very large volume. May I ask what the gentleman is reading from?

Mr. HAMLIN. From the printed report of the testimony taken in an examination before the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

Mr. MANN. Is it possible that that committee has taken that much testimony?

Mr. HAMLIN. No. I would be very glad to explain that. This committee took 10 pages of testimony, and it appears that the transcript of the testimony was sent down to the State Department. There it was retained for two weeks and came back and was printed, and with the 10 pages of printed testimony come in about 438 pages of "junk" that have cost the Government, no doubt, several hundred dollars to print, that is absolutely unauthorized and of no use to anybody.

Mr. MANN. Of course the Secretary of State did not have it printed.

Mr. HAMLIN. He reported it to the committee, and I presume the chairman of the committee had it printed.

Mr. MANN. It could only be printed by order of the committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. It was not printed by order of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Is that the first result of giving to one of the expenditure committees the authority to print hearings—a document of that size probably costing $5,000 to print and not worth 5 cents after it is printed?

Mr. HAMLIN. I have just stated to the gentleman that this was not ordered printed by the committee, and I do not know by whose authorization it was done.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman a member of the committee?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to him that the Public Printer informed me, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriation Committee, in consideration of the sundry civil bill, that it was printed by order of the committee and it could not be printed otherwise.

Mr. HAMLIN. But it is just like the fellow who went to jail, and his lawyer told him he could not be put in jail, and he said, "By gar, I am here just the same." It was printed without authority of the committee, I undertake to say.

Mr. MANN. I undertake to say that the Public Printer has an order from that committee for the printing of that document.

Mr. HAMLIN. There has been no meeting of the committee since this testimony was taken, and this part was no part of the testimony taken there, so of course it could not have been authorized by the committee, but, Mr. Chairman, I must decline to be led off on that.

Mr. MANN. I do not wonder that the gentleman does not desire to be led off on that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, the gentleman can not charge up to me any of the responsibility for the printing of this document, for I had nothing to do with it. There has been no meeting of the committee, and no member of that committee—I see one sitting on the other side of the Chamber, and I am sure that he will agree with me that there has been no meeting of the committee to authorize or reject the publication of this volume. It was printed by order, perhaps, of the chairman of the committee. I do not know, but am sure that it was not done by order of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not finding any fault with the committee; I suppose those are usually printed on the order of the chairman. May I ask the gentleman, who is a member of the committee, whether that document, outside of the evidence taken by the committee, is of any value to anybody?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think not; absolutely none.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact outside of the first ten pages of the document the entire document consists of schedules and specifications prepared by the central purchasing committee for all departments at Washington and is a mere reprint of those schedules?

Mr. HAMLIN. Why, the gentleman is almost entirely accurate in that statement. It does consist of copies of blank forms, which I presume could have been sent to us without printing, but by whom prepared I do not know, but they——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.]. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMLIN. And, as I say, without any meeting of the committee this printed volume has come back and been circulated among the members of the committee, and I am sure it was not authorized by the committee. The printed testimony was authorized, but not this other stuff that has been added to it.

Mr. GOULDEN. I will ask if nearly 400 pages of that volume is of any particular value to any of the Members of this House, or contain any information that is of any importance?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am satisfied 20 pages will include all that can possibly be of any advantage to this House. Now, the point that I wanted to make, and I am making it in the utmost good faith, if I can have the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill, is that it appears from Mr. Knox's testimony that he gave before the committee that the amount necessary to pay the salaries and expenses, including $4,500 rent for this particular division or bureau, is $75,000. Why did the committee make a provision in this bill for $100,000, and why did it not make it for only $75,000?

Mr. GILLETT. Because he expressly stated that he wanted $25,000 for contingencies. He said at any time there might happen something of tremendous importance here—I think that is his language—in connection with our trade relations, and it would be very important that they should have a fund which they could employ for that purpose, and we gave it to him.

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, I believe, Mr. Chairman, it is not a very good policy to appropriate a great deal of money that may be necessary only on some far-away contingency. Congress is in session a good part of the year, and it seems to me, if a contingency should arise, we could appropriate the necessary amount of money or make it up in a deficiency bill.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman well recognizes this, that it might be on a subject which, for the interest of our Government, it might not be wise to have made public and come to Congress and ask for the money. That is where the State Department, of course, differs from the others.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, right on that point I want to say that I believe there is a whole lot too much secrecy about some of these departments, and I am not in favor of encouraging it, but in this particular matter I can not conceive where there is anything to be concealed. The duty of this bureau in expending this sum is to check up and compare the tariffs of the different countries with ours and determine and advise the President as to whether he should enforce the maximum rate or, by proclamation, relieve other countries of that maximum rate. Now, that certainly can not be a secret, and the duties of this Board of Trade Relations is to investigate those matters, and I can not conceive how there possibly could be any secret connected with that matter. Therefore at the proper time I would like to move an amendment to this bill, making the amount $75,000 instead of $100,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, that before the Committee on Appropriations Mr. Knox said:

> Secretary KNOX. I have explained our work under the tariff law. A moment ago Mr. Burleson asked me a question about cotton-seed oil as bearing upon the wisdom of your allowing us the remainder of this appropriation, amounting to about $25,000, for emergencies. It is impossible to know when the department may be called upon to make an expenditure of tremendous consequences to the country. We have no fund to make it from except this one, if it is a case for special work here in Washington. Without the emergency fund, on the other hand, we should have no adequate fund for special work abroad.
> Mr. BINGHAM. Will this $100,000 appropriation be needed for the continuation in your department of the new divisions in the future?
> Secretary KNOX. Absolutely so. It is really necessary to the department's efficiency that the new posts be appropriated for specifically and permanently, and that I be allowed the leeway of about $25,000, for further use as needed, along the lines of the old appropriation, always bearing in mind that no increase is being asked. We have great hopes to be able to reduce our estimate in the future for the permanent service in the lowest grades in the department. There has not been a perfectly scientific method of filing papers. Mr. Root, when he came in, made a tremendous advance over the methods that had been employed before his time, but since that change was made there has been developed a higher degree of perfection in methods. We have had a corps of competent experts very recently go through the Bureau of Indexes and Archives, etc.

Now, it is his purpose to use this for any emergency that may arise, including any reform in the methods of business that are now in vogue in the department and are found to be necessary. I think the amount is absolutely necessary and ought to be allowed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say in reply to that, however, that it ought to be, and seems to be, a standing advertisement of this administration that it is in favor of economy. Now, we are all human. If you give to the chief of any of these departments a large sum of money, he can be more easily persuaded that an exigency arises whereby they may expend this money, because they have it at their disposal. My idea is, if you want to economize, we are the ones to hold the purse strings. His own statement is that he only needs $75,000 to pay these salaries and to pay the rent. Now, let us hold the purse strings, and let us be the judges as to whether there is a contingency arising, because of which he ought to have more money, and not give it carte blanche to this department to determine for themselves about these contingencies.

I move, Mr. Chairman, to amend the amendment by striking out "one hundred thousand" and inserting "seventy-five thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "seventy-five thousand."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is still pending, I believe?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to make a motion to close debate in five minutes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to say a few words, and I may wish more than five minutes. If the gentleman will make it ten minutes and give me——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in ten minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have heard not a word from the gentleman in charge of this bill giving any reason why this amendment should be adopted and why the fixed charges in the Department of State should be increased $100,000 a year, except that the Secretary of State has recommended it——

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman could not have been here yesterday, if he makes that statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was not here when it was all discussed yesterday, but I certainly have not heard anything today on that subject. One of the unfortunate occurrences in the present administration was the great difficulty with which the united effort of Congress and the President inducted the present Secretary of State into office and the very small result that we have obtained from that work.

I think it has been conceded by all that the State Department under the present administration has not made good. I think it is conceded by all that the State Department in interfering with affairs in the Orient has not been along the lines of building up American influence and developing American commerce in that territory, and therefore I think that this is one of the last places where Congress should show an inclination to approve extravagance in the expenditure of public money. The President of the United States ever since he has been in office has sung the tune of economy to the Congress of the United States. Ever since he has been in office the Cabinet officers under his command have made recommendation after recommendation for increased expenditures in their departments.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman permit just a suggestion along that line?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. Speaking about economy, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the contingent expenses for the diplomatic service jumped from $225,000 in 1908 to $325,000 in 1909. The contingent expenses for the consular service jumped from $350,000 in 1908 to $520,000 in 1909 and 1910.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yet the prime minister of the Cabinet, serving under a President who poses as an economist, is prepared to nearly double his contingent expenses and create these new bureaus that are absolutely unnecessary at this time. The machinery of the Government would move on with the same regularity that it does to-day if this new bureau was not created.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe it was understood between the chairman of the committee and myself that I should have the other five minutes, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will occupy the time.

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is not anything to show that the great business interests in this country will be improved one cent or developed a particle by the increase of expenditure of $100,000 in this department. Now, if you gentlemen on that side of the House want to make good, if you believe that the President of the United States is honest when he recommends economy, and that he is not doing it merely as claptrap to catch the populace at the next election; if you believe he made that recommendation with all due honesty, I say it is time for you to wake up and show that you are willing to economize and can economize in these appropriation bills. There are a great many things in permanent expenditures of the Government that you can not economize on; I recognize that.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman does not mean, of course, that in days of effort to economize there may not be times when you have to increase expenditures.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say that this is not that time.

Mr. GILLETT. That is where you and I differ.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say that you can not go before the country and say that this is such a time.

Mr. GILLETT. You can not deny the fact that we could not have acted in a foreign complication if we had not created this bureau?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not tell. Of course, we can not tell whether the comet sailing from the sun this way might hit the earth and jar it out of its present orbit. Of course there are things we can not know in advance and undertake to say that it is necessary. You are responsible for the creation of this bureau; you are creating this bureau to-day solely and simply because the Secretary of State desires it created for his own personal purposes. He wants to have the burden and the load of the work that is being done in the department put on the shoulders of other men. His predecessors have done this work; his predecessors have done it satisfactorily and successfully, and he had not been inducted into the office of Secretary of State before he made a demand on Congress to create officers on whom he could unload the burden of his own department.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman know that his predecessors made virtually the same recommendation prior to his induction into office?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. His immediate predecessor might have done so. But I am talking about this one. Now, his predecessor was a very much abler and more successful Secretary of State than the gentleman who occupies the office to-day, and succeeded in carrying on the duties of that office without this additional appropriation and without the creation of these additional officers.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman and I may differ as to the respective merits of the two men. He did make good. But as to the facts as stated by the gentleman, one statement to the effect that the present Secretary was seeking to double the appropriation was based upon the publication read by the gentleman from Indiana, whereas the items that he referred to were not under the administration of the present Secretary of State.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But some of them were. It alluded to both administrations.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I challenge the gentleman to show me from the document read here by the gentleman from Indiana any place that would indicate in the slightest degree the willingness of the present Secretary of State.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Read the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June, 1909.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All debate has expired, by order of the committee. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SHERLEY. May we have the amendment reported.

The amendment of Mr. HAMLIN was again reported.

Mr. SHERLEY. I mean the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment of Mr. GILLETT was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 80.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the following language in the beginning of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts:

Counselor for the Department of State and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500, and to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1909.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following: "Counselor for the Department of State and resident diplomatic officer, each at a salary of $7,500, and to be appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1909."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 72.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BARCHFELD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtis, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6851. An act authorizing the village of Taylors Falls, Minn., and the village of St. Croix Falls, Wis., to construct a bridge across the St. Croix River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

H. R. 19028. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18006) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For services of lithographer and necessary materials for the lithographic press, $1,500.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question. Does this language in line 16, "lithographic press," mean that they keep a press and printing office up there in the office of the Secretary of State?

Mr. GILLETT. It is not a printing press; it is a lithographic press.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A lithographic press is practically a printing press, is it not?

Mr. GILLETT. It does not print——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What does it do?

Mr. GILLETT. It does not print books or anything of that sort.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know it does not print books—that is, this particular press—but do they keep a printing establishment in the office of the Secretary of State?

Mr. GILLETT. They do not. This is all they have, I think.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What does this man do?

Mr. GILLETT. They make the blank commissions for diplomatic officers, and so forth.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not the gentleman mistaken in his statement that there is no printing office in connection with the Department of State?

Mr. GILLETT. Perhaps I am, but it is not provided for in this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Until recently they have been maintaining a printing office for the Department of State, one for the Treasury Department, and one for the War Department.

Mr. KEIFER. That has been changed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Some of it has been changed and some of it has not. We have been after that in the last week in our committee.

Mr. KEIFER. The Treasury printing office was changed.

Mr. SHERLEY. It ought never to have existed.

Mr. KEIFER. We took it out of the Treasury not long ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenses, including the purchase, care, and subsistence of horses, to be used only for official purposes, repair of wagons, carriages, and harness, rent of stable, telegraph and electrical apparatus and repairs to the same, and other items not included in the foregoing, $8,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill. In this paragraph to appropriate $8,000 to cover the expenses of the following items for the incoming fiscal year, to wit:

Including the purchase, care, and subsistence of horses to be used only for official purposes, repair of wagons, carriages, and harness, rent of stable, telegraph and electrical apparatus and repairs to the same, and other items not included in the foregoing, $8,000.

In making up this item, has the gentleman any statement showing how he reached the conclusion that $8,000 would be needed for this purpose? How much, for instance, of the $8,000 is to be used for the subsistence and care of horses?

Mr. GILLETT. This is the same amount that was provided last year, and I will state to the gentleman that on a great many of these items, where the amount is the same as for the preceding year, we did not go into the details, and I do not think we made any inquiry this year as to this.

Mr. HAMLIN. Can the gentleman tell the committee how many horses the State Department has?

Mr. GILLETT. The Secretary of State has three, I think.

Mr. HAMLIN. Those are his individual property, are they not?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think, perhaps, I can give the committee a little information upon this subject. It appears that the Appropriation Committee did not go into the details. It has been testified to before our committee, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, that that department has four horses—two for a carriage and two for a mail wagon. It has also been testified to that for last year the department expended $237.66 for shoeing those horses.

Mr. SIMS. How many horses?

Mr. HAMLIN. Four.

Mr. SIMS. Did they use silver or platinum for the shoes?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think they must have used the gold standard.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he knows what it costs to repair this one mail wagon.

Mr. HAMLIN. It appears from the detailed statement, filed by the Secretary of State, that they expended last year $589 to repair this one mail wagon.

Mr. CULLOP. How much would it cost new?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think you could buy two of them new, probably, for $500. The stable rent for those four horses was $720. There was a pasturage bill of $62.83. There was a harness-repair bill of $15.60. The forage bill for these four horses was $594.88. While I have not at this moment the statement before me, yet I remember that all of these items in relation to the four horses and the carriage and wagon, without taking into consideration the salary of the hostler, cost the Government over $2,500 last year. Now, it seems to me there has been inexcusable extravagance connected with these particular items and that this committee now being asked to make an appropriation to cover these items, ought to scrutinize them closely and appropriate only such sum as is actually needed, but none for extravagance.

I may say, to be entirely fair, that the evidence shows that, perhaps, for three months after Secretary Knox went into office they had six horses, but Mr. Carr testified that one became lame and the other was too old, and they sold two, but outside of those three months they have had four horses in the State Department. Now, for the subsistence and care of these four horses, the repair of one wagon—for that is all they have—and the harness for the four horses, the rent of the stable, and the telegraph and electric apparatus and repairs, you propose to appropriate the sum of $8,000 for the next fiscal year.

I am in favor of giving them all that is necessary to pay for these things, but if you were to tell a farmer out in my country that it costs $237.66 to shoe four horses one year, he would tell you that you were either prevaricating or that you were absolutely crazy.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman must remember that the farmer's horse travels over rocks, and these horses travel over asphalt.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; we have a few rocks out in our country, and horses will wear out shoes over those rocks very much faster than they will over these asphalt pavements here in the city, and we know that it only costs from $1.50 to $2 to shoe one horse all around, as we call it, and if you were to shoe him every month in the year you could not expend one-quarter of the amount expended by the State Department last year for shoeing these horses. I grew up on a farm and have handled horses all my life, and I have a pretty good idea of these things.

Aside from that, they must have been on pasture a while, because there is an item of $62.83 for pasturing these horses. So I put it up to the committee—and do it seriously—that there is no question but there is inexcusable extravagance connected with these items, and it is our duty to put a stop to it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman's committee and similar committees for expenditures in the departments have been created for that very purpose, to unearth the extravagances, and not the Appropriation Committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. We have unearthed something and I am trying to tell you about it. I am not criticising the Appropriation Committee. I hope the gentleman did not so understand it. I made the statement after the gentleman from Massachusetts said that his committee did not go into it, that I might be able to enlighten the committee a little. I realize that it is peculiarly the province of the committees on expenditures to unearth these things, and as a humble member of one of those committees I am doing my best to do so, and I am now giving you the information that we have elicited so far.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. A few years ago we passed a law absolutely requiring these committees on expenditures in the departments to give publicity to these things so as to cut down everything that was extravagant.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; but I notice they have not done it.

[The time of Mr. HAMLIN having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the gentleman proceeds I would like to recall his attention to the question asked him by the gentleman from Georgia, whether it was the duty of the Appropriations Committee to inquire into the details of the appropriation with a view of determining whether or not there is or has been extravagance? I should like to ask the gentleman how else the Committee on Appropriations can determine the proper sum to appropriate for a given purpose except by inquiring into the manner in which the money appropriated has hitherto been expended?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not a member of the Committee on Appropriations, but if I were I think I should want to know all about it. But the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, stated a few moments ago that they recommended the $8,000 in this paragraph because it was the same amount that was appropriated for this purpose last year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What is the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State for? If you want to duplicate it in the Committee on Appropriations, why, then, abolish the other committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think I can tell the gentleman what the committees on expenditures are for, and I would be glad to do it if it would not take up too much time. I will, however, read from the rules the duty of the committees on expenditures in the departments, for I am satisfied that but few Members here realize the tremendous importance of these expenditure committees. The rules enjoins upon these committees—

The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers—

And so forth.

I may state right here that it is my judgment that while these committees have long been regarded as "dead committees," they are among the most important committees in the House if they will only do their duty.

Mr. GOULDEN. Has the gentleman's committee made any report to the House or the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HAMLIN. We are not through yet. We will make a report when we get through.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the gentleman remember whether the appropriation for this purpose last year was $8,000?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; it was $8,000.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then, will the gentleman inform me whether or not any portion of this $8,000 has ever been returned to the Treasury. Is the entire appropriation used for these miscellaneous purposes, or is a part of it returned to the Treasury?

Mr. HAMLIN. My information, in examining the reports for former years, as made by the Secretary of State, is, that as a rule the amount appropriated and the amount expended are identical; rarely any of it ever reverting to the Treasury.

Mr. GOULDEN. The appropriations and expenditures are always made equal to each other?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; there is nothing left at the end of the year. But on this question of horses, in order that it may be seen that I am correct in what I say, I want to read this part of the testimony taken before our committee:

Mr. HAMLIN. In glancing down the contingent expenses my attention is called to the item of horseshoeing, which suggests an inquiry to my mind. How many horses has the State Department?

Mr. CARR. We have a mail wagon, and two carriages belonging to the Secretary of State. There are four horses; two horses for the mail wagon and two horses that are used for the Secretary's carriage.

Mr. HAMLIN. Have you had four horses during the year?

Mr. CARR. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not suppose you gentlemen have information enough to tell me how it would be possible to expend $237.66 for shoeing four horses during the year?

Mr. CARR. Part of the early part of last summer we had six horses.

Secretary WILSON. You had six under Mr. ROOT?

Mr. CARR. Yes; under Mr. ROOT.

Mr. HAMLIN. You never had more than six horses at any one time?

Mr. CARR. I think not. One of the six became lame last summer and the other was getting old, so we disposed of two, thinking four would be sufficient.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the Government furnish motors?

Mr. CARR. No.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no question about the number of horses that the State Department has, and there is no question about the amount of money they claim their keep cost the Government last year. That these items are absolutely extravagant there can be no doubt.

There is one item in this paragraph providing for telegraph expenses, and the repair of telegraphic instruments. We have not reached that item yet in the examination of the State Department by our committee. Consequently I do not know what that amounts to. If I knew that I would be ready to offer an amendment cutting down this item to a sum that I think would be sufficient to cover these miscellaneous items. My judgment is, from the items that I do know about, that we could safely cut this appropriation down 50 per cent, and before the paragraph is voted on I shall offer an amendment cutting the amount down to something reasonable. If any gentleman could make a suggestion as to the cost of these telegraphic items in this paragraph I would be glad to hear from him.

Mr. Chairman, I now have in my hand the printed report of the Secretary of State covering the items about which I have been speaking, and I will read each item, with the amount he claims to have expended last year for the purposes indicated:

Repairs of harness	$15.60
Horseshoeing	237.66
Forage	594.88
Repair mail wagon and vehicles	589.00
Rent of stables	720.00
Pasturing horses	62.83
Stable supplies	15.40
Harness and stable supplies	430.00
Painting vehicles	125.25
Repairing vehicles	28.75
Total	3,419.37

Now, I submit to the House that this is a pretty large sum to be used in keeping four horses—or even six horses—one mail wagon, and one carriage for one year.

That we may understand this a little better, let me figure it down a little closer.

We have one mail wagon with two horses and one carriage with two horses. Then, it cost the Government last year $3,419.37 to keep these two teams, or $284.95 per month, or $9.50 per day.

When I consider that our committee has just begun this investigation, and yet we find this reckless extravagance, I believe that it demonstrates the importance of a most thorough investigation of this department. This, I hope, we may make. Gentlemen on that side may regard this as too small and trivial a matter to notice and may speak of it contemptuously, if they will, but I want to say to you that the people of this country who pay the taxes will not so consider it, for they realize that the small continued leakage will ultimately wreck the strongest financial institution in the world.

Let me remind you that it is the small leaks that sink the ship; the small drops of water that make the ocean. It is often the small sins that damn the soul.

Mr. Chairman, I am conscious of this fact, that if I can only be instrumental in stopping the little leaks I will save this Government infinitely more money than will gentlemen who can not deign to take notice of the little leaks, but who pretend to be continually hunting for large ones, but always hunting in the dark without a lantern.

There are gentlemen here on the other side of this Chamber who talk by the hour in favor of economy, but who never fail to vote against any amendment to these appropriation bills which tends to cut down these extravagant, inexcusable, and outrageous appropriations of the public moneys.

Some of them seem to be afflicted with a kind of political astigmatism and can not see any leakage or wanton waste of the public moneys by a Republican administration.

Mr. Chairman, my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says it would be a reflection upon the Secretary of State to adopt my amendment. However, that is not true; but if it were, Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is a reflection upon the intelligence of the people of this country for the Secretary of State to say that the keep of four horses and two vehicles for one year cost $3,419.37 without confessing rank profligacy and reckless waste of public funds.

If we take the muzzle off of these executive departments and turn them loose in the public crib, it will be but a short time when we will be forced to cry out for a "Joseph" to come and prepare us for the "lean years" which will inevitably follow.

Mr. Chairman, about as ludicrous a thing as I have witnessed lately is the standing "economy advertisement" of this administration. No one will more heartily support the administration its its efforts to cut down expenses than myself, if it really wants to do it, but I am from Missouri, and confess I have yet to see the first evidence of real economy practiced by the crowd that is now in control of affairs in the Nation. Let me revert to a little recent history. When we had the post-office bill under consideration a few days ago I discovered an item appropriating a large sum of money to hire, among other kinds of vehicles, some little cheap gasoline automobiles to gather up the mails here in Washington, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, and Boston. Upon inquiry of the chairman of the committee I found to my astonishment that we were renting these little "runabouts" and paying $3,000 a year rent on each machine. Think of it! For one of these machines, with two chauffeurs, each to run the machine eight hours per day, we pay $3,000 a year rent. Do you call that economy? And that, too, in view of the fact that the rural mail carriers, who furnish their own teams and vehicles and drive an average of about 20 miles each day through heat and cold, storm and shine, over rocks and through mud, faithfully performing their duties, and you will only pay them $900 and less per year. I protest that this is neither fair nor just. I offered an amendment seeking to cut this item down to a reasonable basis, but you fellows, of course, voted it down.

We passed an item in this bill a few moments ago where you gave the Secretary of State $100,000 to maintain the Bureau of Trade Relations, a bureau employing 16 people. I showed by the testimony of the Secretary himself that the annual cost of maintaining this bureau, including salaries and rent, was only $75,000 a year.

I offered an amendment to cut the proposed amount for this purpose down to $75,000, and you Republican "economists" promptly voted it down, and gave him $100,000.

Within the last year and a half you increased the President's salary $25,000 a year, and then after you had travailed and brought forth that miserable tariff monstrosity, christened the Aldrich-Cannon-Payne bill, you realized that it was more than even a patient and long-suffering people would stand for, and you, in the interest of "economy," of course, voted $25,000 a year out of the Treasury to pay the traveling expenses of the President to go around over the country and insult the intelligence of the people by telling them that the Aldrich-Cannon-Payne bill is the best tariff bill the country ever had.

Mr. Chairman, I do not like your brand of economy. The only time I have ever known you to try to economize is on something that is of direct and immediate benefit to the people.

Referring again to the post-office bill, which you passed a few days ago, you very carefully refrained from cutting down the railway mail pay any, but made the usual annual increase to take care of that service, but when it came to rural free delivery, the service that takes the mail to the door of the farmer, and is a great blessing to him, you suddenly grew economic and refused to appropriate a dollar to extend this service until we forced you, by an amendment offered by a Democrat on the floor of this House, and yet you have the temerity to tell the people that you are the friends of rural free mail delivery.

You sent out your inspectors last year, ostensibly to inspect rural routes, just before the election, and they would, or did, often notify the carriers to meet them at night in town, and would proceed to suggest to the carriers that they need not expect to have their salaries increased unless the Republican party was again successful at the polls; seeking, of course, in a gentle way to convey the idea that they had better work for the Republican ticket.

Yet when I, a Democrat, offered an amendment the other day to the post-office bill increasing the salaries of these rural carriers on maximum routes to $1,080 a year and on the shorter routes in same proportion the Republican chairman of the committee made a point of order against it and would not permit the House to even vote upon it. Verily, I say unto you, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Mr. Chairman, I am not enamored of this Taft-Aldrich-Cannon brand of Republicanism. It is of the cross-eyed variety. When their faces seem to be turned toward the people their eyes are looking straight into the vaults of the Trust and special interests of this country and feasting upon the consoling sign posted thereon, to wit, "I will never leave or forsake thee."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not expect the powers that be to look with favor upon my efforts to expose what I believe to be a wanton and extravagant waste of public money, but I care little for that. I have the approval of my own conscience, and I believe my conduct in this regard will have the approval of the people; at least I expect to ask the people of my district to reelect me to Congress, and if they send me back here I shall continue to hunt for the leakages in the National Treasury, both small and great. I expect to "hew to the line, letting the chips fall where they may," and the charge of lèse majesté will neither intimidate nor deter me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Some gentlemen may conclude that this inquiry into the incidental expenses of the State Department is a cheese-paring performance, but I will tell you what conclusions I have come to about it. You have got to take all these smaller items, as well as the larger items, or you will never have any kind of economy in this House. I have stated that this $8,000 proposition in here is absolutely ridiculous; because they had $8,000 last year, they have $8,000 this year. It may run the same year in and year out for several years. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] is a farmer——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest right there, before the gentleman goes any further, that we are compelled to follow the estimates, and the estimate was $8,000 for this expense. If there has been any fraud perpetrated, that department has done it upon the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not accusing the Committee on Appropriations of any high crimes and misdemeanors.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I know, but I want the gentleman to know where the estimate comes from.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not care where it comes from, and of course I know the gentleman states where it did come from. Now, the gentleman from Georgia is a farmer. I used to be one, and I wish I were one again. Out in the country he knows and I know that it costs only $1 or $1.25 or $1.50 to have a horse shod "all around," as we call it. If you have what are called "ice shoes" put on, it costs a quarter more. Well, now, I am not in favor of holding these people down in Washington to country prices, because it costs more to live here, but if you have four horses shod all around every month at $4 a month apiece it only amounts to $192, and I do not believe it costs any $4——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One hundred and twenty-five dollars ought to be abundant money to shoe those horses.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course it is. If anybody is getting $4 in this town for shoeing horses, he is getting a small graft somewhere. Now, if you put it at $3.50—and I have figured it both ways—it amounts to $168. Yet the State Department pays $237.60 for that work, which Colonel LIVINGSTON says is worth only $150. Now, take another thing. Here are four horses. How much do those horses cost? I undertake to say, concerning the horses that work to this mail wagon, that it is a liberal allowance to say they would cost $450 or $500. No; a good team of draft horses, for service on these smooth streets here in Washington, can be bought for $500.

Mr. BURLESON. What about carriage horses?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will come to that in a moment. You can buy the best team of mules that pull, and they pull more than a horse, at from $450 to $600.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands these are not heavy draft horses.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That makes them cost that much less.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, in regard to these carriage horses that they drive to the state coach, my judgment about it is that a man would be getting burnt very badly if he paid $1,000 for a team of horses to work to that state carriage here. Now, another thing is——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It would depend upon how the horses are bred. If they were No. 1 bred horses, they might cost $1,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Georgia makes a very pertinent suggestion, and that is that if they were high-bred horses they would cost more. Now, another thing about it. Do these horses die every year and have to be replaced with a new team every year, or not? If you do not begin on these items, where are you going to begin?

I know this about shoeing horses: Where I live we have fine gravel roads; 200 miles of the finest gravel roads in the world are in the county in which I live, and two run out of my own town; and these gravel roads wear out shoes on horses pretty fast, a great deal faster than these smooth asphalt streets in Washington. When I am at home and use my buggy horse nearly every day, I have him shod once a month. He can get along, I think, with about 6 or 8 shoeings in a year if there was no particular endeavor to save his feet. One-half of the time the man simply resets his shoes, and when he does that he charges a dollar. Well, now, if out in the country it only costs a dollar to reset a set of shoes on a horse, in Washington it ought not to cost more than $2, and then you can cut this down still more. Now, they run these horses part of the time out to pasture. A man who has any sense when he turns a horse out to pasture pulls his shoes off him, and he is not shod at all, so as to give his hoofs a chance to get back into prime condition, and I undertake to say that unless they buy a new set of carriage horses and a new set of wagon horses every year, then this appropriation ought to be cut down to $4,000, and I will so move.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared at all to criticise the gentleman as to its being cheeseparing. I quite agree with him that it is well for the House to scrutinize and criticise these small expenditures, and I am very glad the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department is acting, although I trust that this first report of theirs, where they spent a couple of thousand dollars for printing what we already have, is not a specimen of the economies which they will produce.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I must insist that the gentleman from Massachusetts fix the responsibility where it rests, and not upon the committee as a committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, on your chairman.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course the Printer does not print without an order of the committee. Now, as to the information which the gentleman has given. Of course it was unnecessary that the Committee on Expenditures should go to any official for that valuable information, because some years ago the Appropriations Committee, with the purpose of economy, offered, and the House, believing that that was our purpose, adopted in one of the appropriation bills, a resolution compelling all the departments to furnish to Congress an itemized statement of all such expenditures as these.

Congress in its wisdom, instead of distributing those to the Appropriations Committee, has distributed those reports to the different committees. But, of course, that can be availed of by anybody, and the information which the gentleman refers to was sent in this year, as it was compelled to be, by that resolution, to Congress. And here are stated in full and itemized all the expenses of the State Department. Now, I do not believe that the House expects——

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. In making the appropriation, as in this case, do you take the list or estimate that is sent in without any investigation as to its correctness or as to whether it was extravagant or not?
